Lieutenant Commander Mark Stull of the U.S. Navy said at the airport Thursday night that the four Marines, all engineers, were attempting to defuse a 155mm shell when it went off.

Other reports said the four had been injured by an U.S.-made cluster bomb or a mine. An U.S. Army spokesman, Lientenant Colonel Lee Delorme, said two of the three other Marines were slightly wounded, one in the arm and the other in the leg, and

A Pentagon spokesman, Henry F. Catto Jr., said in Washington the blast was "just an accident," not the result of hostile action against U.S. forces.
U.S. officials said there was still "quite a bit of ordnance" in the airport area, which until Wednesday was occupied by Israeli forces.

New Law Lets U.S. Step Up Spying on Foreign Diplomats

Los Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON - A new federal law permits the United States to vastly improve its watch on foreign diplomats here, even to plac-ing spies in their embassies and homes. The law takes effect Fri-

The Soviet agency, the Administration for Services to the Diplomatic Corps, is ostensibly part of the Soviet Foreign Ministry. But in fact, according to U.S. intelligence officials, it is under the Soviet secret police, or KGB. Through the agency, Soviet spies are placed in foreign embassies and homes.

President Ronald Reagan signed the legislation Aug. 24 as part of the State Department appropriations bill. In a two-page statement, he referred only briefly to the Forrigh Missions Act, saying it "provides authority to regulate the ac-tivities of foreign missions in our country, in order to promote reciprocity in our diplomatic relationships and to protect our national security."

Administration officials were more explicit in their arguments to persuade Congress to enact the law. Besides permitting tit-for-tat reciprocity aimed at improving the welfare of U.S. diplomats abroad, the administration promised, the measure would "increase the capability of national security agencies to oversee foreign government ac-tivities in the United States." The administration's bill was enacted with only one significant change: an amendment offered by eight members of the Senate Intelligence Committee that directs that the State Department's new anthority "be exercised in accor-dance with procedures and guidelines approved by the president."

Sources : said the amendment was intended to ensure both that the counterintelligence potential of the law was exploited and that any such spy activities were kept within the broad restrictions on intelligence approved by Mr. Reagan

At least one Soviet diplomat attended congressional hearings on the measure, officials said. So did other Communist bloc diplomats. Even before the bill became law, U.S. officials said, it was credited with beneficial effects.

Camp Assaults Laid to Top Phalangist Chiefs

By Colin Campbell New York Times Service

DAMASCUS - The operation that started in the Chatila refugee camp in Beirut and resulted in the massacre of more than 300 civilians was directed by the top Phalangist military commanders and involved the elite corps of the militia, according to Phalangist and Western diplomatic sources in President Amin Gemayel, according to these sources, is oot believed to have known much about the operation. Although he was in the Phalangist leadership and now heads the party, be was effectively excluded from its military circle and was apparently not involved in the planning.

His brother, Bashir, who had been elected president before him and was assassinated Sept. 14, said before his death that he planned to disband the Christian militia and strengthen the regular Lebanese Army, which is a separate force of about 22,000 men.

From the information supplied by the sources, it could not be determined whether the massacre that occurred after the troops went in was planned from the begin-

The informants said the other leaders of the operation that led to the massacre included Joseph Edde, commander of the militia forces in southern Lebanon; Dib Anastas, chief of the Phalangist military police: Michel Zouein, a close aide to Mr. Hobeika and the man who led a successful attack in 1980 against the rival Christian militia of former President Camille Chamoun, and Marun Mishalani, a Phalangist commander in East

The roughly 2,000 soldiers commanded by the men named above represent the best-trained core of the Phalangist militia, according to one Lebanese Christian informant with knowledge of the militia's organization.

The accounts contradicted earlier reports that the troops who carried ont the massacre were breakaway soldiers from irregular units. In addition, most of those inter-viewed said they did not believe that Major Saad Haddad, the Isracli-backed leader of another militia that operates mainly in south-ern Lebanon, or his troops played an important role in the ma

Sharon's Account According to one Western diplomat in Beirut, a high-ranking Leb-anese Army officer said the plan for Christian milioamen to enter the camps had been discussed for some time between Israeli and Christian officers — that it had been outlined, in fact, before the assassination of Bashir Gemayel. Although the Israelis gave the Phalangists the go-ahead to enter the carriers there is no conclusive. the camps, there is no conclusive evidence that they knew the Phalangists were going to kill the

The Israeli defense minister, Ariel Sharon, suggested in a recent statement to parliament that the plan was worked out on Wednesion and shortly after Israeli troops began moving into West Beirut.

Yet in the weeks before Sept. 15. according to Western intelligence sources, Mr. Sharoo met several times with Bashir Gemayel in the back room of East Beirut's elegant Retro Restaurant. What they dis-cussed has not been disclosed. The Lebanese Army officer said that originally, the Christians were to have occupied the camps on Sept. 24. The plan, he said, may have been speeded up after the assassi-

Other sources in Beirut said the original purpose of the operation in the camps had been not only to fight, disarm and arrest or execute any remaining Palestinian guerrillas but also to frighten Lebanon's Palestinians into leaving all their camps and then Lebanon itself. A similar report was published in the Hebrew-language newspaper Ha'aretz in Israel.

Mr. Sharon told the Knesset that the general staff and commander in chief of the Phalangists met twice with Israel's ranking generals on Sept. I5 and discussed entering the camps, which they did the next afternoon.

The commander in chief of the Phalangist militia is named Fuad Ephraim. Mr. Ephraim, who is married to the daughter of one of Bashir Gemayel's sisters, was Mr. Gemayet's choice to replace him as head of Lebanon's largest Christian militia. He was elected both head of the militia's policy-making

Before Israeli Move

JERUSALEM - Defense Minister Ariel Sharon of Israel expressed grave concern that Chris-tian Phalangist militiamen would massacre Palestinian civilians shortly before the Israeli Army was ordered to send the Phalange militia units into the Chatila and Sabra refugee camps in West Beirut, it was learned Thorsday.

The predictions of a potential bloodbath were made while Mr. Sharon and other senior Israeli officials were pressing for the dispatch of regular Lebanese Army units into the refugee neigh-borhoods to root out armed Palestinian guerrillas.

They argued that the assassina-tion of the Phalangist leader, President-elect Bashir Gemayel, greatly increased the danger that the Christian militianien would renew their attacks on the Palestinians.

Mr. Sharon has publicly main-tained that he and other Israeli officials never dreamed that the Phalange militia units would go on a rampage of indiscriminate killing once they were inside the camps.

But well-informed sources said that the defense minister and the army's chief of staff, General Rafael Eitan, raised the prospect of just such a slaughter the night of Sept. 16.

It was on this night that, with the blessing of Prime Minister Menachem Begin and the Israeli cabinet, Israeli Army units in West Beirut were ordered to assist the Phalange militiamen in entering Chatila and Sabra

Mr. Sharon's spokesman, Uri Dan, did not return phone calls about these warnings.
Sources said Lebanese Army

commanders were willing to order their own units into the camps, but said that they could not do so without authorization from the Lebanese government

They said the chief roadblock to allowing the regular army into the refugee areas was Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan of Lebanon, who apparently feared an adverse reac-tion in Lebanon's Moslem community if the army units, generally commanded by Christian officers, were to take over the Palestinian neighborhoods.

In the end, according to sources familiar with the events leading up to the massacre, the determination of Mr. Sharon and other Israeli officials to destroy the remaining guerrillas and their stockpiles of arms overcame their fear of widespread killing by the Phalange mil-ing.

"They appeared to be a regular army in every way. They promised to fight just against terrorists."

The other main defense offered by Israeli officials for their con-duct before and during the massa-cre was that they acted to balt the killing as soon as they learned of

But this assertion also has been called into question by reports in the Israeli press that on Sept. 16, the first night of the massacre, the Israeli Army division command in Beirut was informed by the Phalange commander inside Chatila that "until now 300 civilians and terrorists have been killed."

General Eitan later agreed to allow the militiamen to remain in the Palestinian camps until the morning of Sept. 18, about 36 hours after they entered. The Israelis are known to have raised the subject of Lebanon's army entering the camps during meetings that Morris Draper, a U.S. envoy, held with Mr. Begin, Mr. Sharon and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir on Sept. 15 and again during a second meeting Mr. Draper held with Mr. Sharon and

World Recession Destroys a Dream in Ireland

Closing of Kilkenny Textile Mill Is Disaster for Local Economy

By Jon Nordheimer Nov York Times Service
KILKENNY, Ireland — The world recession finally caught up with Kilkenny one day last spring. In the rest of Ireland and the world the process had been like a drought: slowly parching and cracking and drying up economies. In Kilkenny it came like a thunderelap.

In June an American textile company closed its Kilkenny mill. a modern two-year-old plant that produced luxury bath towels for the European market. The shutting of the plant threw 630 people out of work. That is not a large figure in the context of de-teriorating conditions in Ireland, where the jobless rate is 16 percent. Nor is it large in the context of Ireland's nine trading partners in the European Economic Com-But in Kilkenny, a city of 14,000 in southeastern lreland where there was another dimension to the failure of the mill.

In the eyes of many, the mili, a $55-million investment by Fieldcrest Mills of North Carolina and the Irish Development Authority, was symbolic of the new Ireland. Its modern looms were operated by skilled technicians, many of whom had left secure jobs in English industrial cities or, in some cases, were recruited from as far away as Australia.

The technicians were, for the most part, realizing the dream of all economic exiles: returning to the land of their birth to a goodpaying job, settling down and making the pledge that Kilkenny was where they would spend the rest of their days. Now they are unemployed, coming home at night to a mortgaged house built on promises two years ago, telling comforting lies about how things will get better and, af-ter the children have been put to bed, sitting at kitchen tables under a dome of light, watching the vapor rise from mugs of tea and caretels in other cities to take part-time work to bring in money for the day when the unemployment benefits will end and the mortgage will still have to be paid.

Hushed late-night talks like these are taking place in the first days of autumn all over Europe. There are millions of young and middle-age workers who have no assurance that they will be able to find permanent work again for years, a cold fact that is being acknowledged even by politicians, some of whom are also joining the ranks of the unemployed as govemments in Europe fall on cco-

Italy, France Agree With Reagan on Terms For Beirut Withdrawal

Claude Cheysson, the French external relations minister, was slightly more cautious. At a breakfast meeting Wednesday with the press, he said it was not unlikely that the multinational force would remain until the foreign troops left. But he stressed that this was up to the Lebanese government.

Mr. Colombo said, "I agree" when asked his view of Mr. Reagan's forecast at a news confer-ence on Tuesday. The president then said the joint force would stay until the foreigners left.

The Italian minister said he told the U.S. secretary of state, George P. Shultz, Wednesday morning that "the evacuation of all foreign forces has to be dealt with at once." He included among the for-contradiction between permanent peace for Israel and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people." He said "neither can be achieved without the other."

In his first address to the UN General Assembly as secretary of state, Mr. Shultz called on all parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict "to accept President Reagan's challenge and hasten the realization of

The removal of Israeli, Syrian and PLO troops must not become an element in the Middle East peace process, Mr. Colombo said. "Otherwise, that negotiation be-comes more complicated and it is

Israel has insist-ed that its border security cannot be entrusted to UN forces and should be carried out by U.S. and

Mr. Cheysson, however, said that a force under Security Council direction was the mechanism pro-vided by the UN charter. Both ministers are here for the General Assembly, and Mr. Co-lombo addressed it on Wednesday. Mr. Ephraim became especially decisive after the assassination, according to Mr. Ghostine, when it was decided that the Lebanese forces should stay home or in their barracks rather than respond by taking up arms.

Several other sources who have had dealings with both Mr. Ephraim and Mr. Hobeika insisted that the intelligence chief, though only 28 years old, was the more formidable of the two and that Mr. Ephraim had probably been placed in charge of the militia in expectation that Bashir Gemayel would keep making its decisions after assuming the presidency. One Christian militia leader said that two battalions of the Phalangist militia, totaling about 1,200 men, had been involved in the move on the Sabra and Chatila camps. One battalion, or more likely part of a battalion amounting to a few hundred men, actually entered the camps. Another re-said privately in recent days that Phalangist troops, tanks and halftracks had been seen moving north from the airport toward the camps on Sept. 16, 17 and 18, the days of the actual massacre. It is widely believed that both the Lebanese government at the time and the army had some notion of what was happening then inside the camps.

American officials have said that they do not know exactly where Mr. Sharon was, or with whom he met, during the days of the massacre and that they only learned of the event after it was virtually completed.

Haig Calls State Dept. Job an Error

NEW YORK — In his first interview since resigning as secretary of state, Alexander M. Haig Jr. says he decided early in his tenure in the Reagan administration that it had been a mistake to take the job.

Mr. Haig realized his error "fairly early on" when he found "opposition developing to one's views merely for the sake of opposing those to a second because of the case in certain instances." views, and I began to conclude that was the case in certain instances."

Such unnecessary disagreements threatened the nation's security, Mr. Haig added in the interview, made Sept. 16 and acheduled Thursday night on ABC. When he resigned June 25, he gave no reason other than that U.S. foreign policy "was shifting from that careful course which we laid out" in the administration.

Basque Group Abandons Terrorism

BAYONNE, France - A minority group of the Spanish Basque ETA political-military faction said Thursday that it has halted all terrorist action and will henceforth fight peacefully for its political ideals.

At a clandestine news conference near here, the delegates of the faction's so-called Seventh Assembly said that they accepted the Madrid government's offer of amnesty for Basque nationalists willing to lay down arms. They said that their decision involves about a quarter of the ETA political military movement, covering approximately 40 refugees and exiles in France and about 20 militants jailed in Spain.

The delegates said that their decision was "a major step toward the pacification of the Basque Country."

Soviet Turbines Loaded in Bremen

BREMEN, West Germany - Two turbines manufactured in West Germany for the Siberian gas pipeline were loaded overnight aboard a ship expected to leave soon for the Soviet Union, harbor sources said.

The turbines are aboard the Bremer Horst Bischoff, a West German ship that the owners said was bound for the Soviet Baltic port of Klaipeda. Diplomatic sources said the shipment would immediately trigger U.S. sanctions on AEG-Kanis, the manufacturers, in line with similar steps already taken against French, British and Italian firms. In Washington, the secretary of commerce, Malcolm Baldrige, said the United States would impose the same sanctions against West German companies supplying equipment for the pipeline as those applied to other European firms who have violated the embargo. They will probably consist of a temporary order barring AEG-Kanis, a subsidiary of the AEG electrical group, from access to U.S. gas technology.

Dutch Labor Quits Coalition Talks

THE HAGUE - A coalition between the Dutch Christian Democratic and Liberal parties became a virtual certainty Thursday after the formal withdrawal of the dominant Labor Party.

Jos Van Kemenade, the Labor Party mediator appointed by Queen Beatrix to explore coalition options, reported the failure of his mission Thursday evening, a spokesman for the queen said. Mr. Van Kemenade said negotiations on a Labor-Christian Democrat coalition broke down on the conflict over nuclear missiles that was the major issue in the election Sept. 8 in which labor came out ahead.

Thus the Labor Party, which unconditionally rejected the missiles, has failed for the second time to forge a coalition on the basis of an election victory. In 1974, Labor went into opposition after negotiations lasting 208 days. Mr. Van Kemenade said he had advised the queen to appoint a Christian Democratic mediator with a mandate for a coalition with the pile of eggshells in the sink.

Mr. Reagan argues that the decline in in-flation in the past 20 months is a triumph of his economic policy, while the simultaneous rise in unemployment is to be ascribed solely In fact, inescapably, lower inflation and higher unemployment are the result of the same causes — high interest and a severe recession. Mr. Reagan would be on firmer ground if be simply pointed out that the improvement in inflatioo has been a good deal better, at a somewhat lower cost in jobs, than most people thought possible in January 1981. But the cost in jobs has been substantial, and the trouble with the present position is its instability. Neither Mr. Reagan nor anyone else wants to continue with unemploy-ment at around 10 percent. Everyone is deep-ly anxious to see an economic recovery get under way. But the effects of the recess on both prices and jobs, are entirely reversi-ble. Will a recovery bring higher inflation along with lower unemployment? That is what happened the last time, as the on prices, and within several years they were again rising at dangerous speed.

The trade-off between more jobs and less inflation is as demonstrable now as it was a generation ago. The dilemma of the 1970s was that it took a progressively higher cost in one to achieve any improvement in the other. The relation between them is not a reliable seesaw, for there have been periods in which the United States has inadvertently which the United States has inadvertently succeeded in raising prices and unemployment together. But to make both go down together? That is much harder.

The Reagan administration has no brilliant new ideas, but oeither has anyone else. America is on a track that implies continued unemployment at painfully high levels, as inflation slowly declines. People who press for faster progress on jobs have to acknowledge the inflationary side effects.

But, similarly, presidents who celebrate lower inflation at their oews conferences are not permitted, by the same rules, to disavow the connection with the unemployment rate. That's the nature of the omelet.

That's the nature of the omelet.

Democracy in Brazil ...

The General Assembly of the United Na-tions too often substitutes a windy ventilation of the silly or the obvious for serious tion of the silly or the obvious for serious diplomacy. Bot on Monday there were special reasons to pay beed to Brazil, by custom the first member of the assembly to speak.

Brazil's president, João Baptista Figueiredo, is a military ruler who says, refreshingly, that even a troubled democracy is worth more than a progressive dictatorship.

The plain-speaking general has for the most part been as good as his word since 1979, when he became the fifth in a parade of military rulers since the armed forces seized power in Brazil 18 years ago. Uoder his regime, political prisoners have been released, gime, political prisoners have been released, exiles have safely returned and censorship has been lifted. On Nov. 15, Brazilians will at last vote io free legislative and gubernatorial elections, for the first time since 1965, putting at risk the government's majority.

There has been some backsliding on President Figueiredo's promise of abertura, or opening. Most notable was the regime's unwise attempt to jail Luis Inacio da Silva, the labor leader, for organizing a strike, and also to keep him out of the gubernatorial race in São Paulo. Overall, though, Brazil's return to democracy has been steady, if slow — in shaming contrast to the frozen tyrannies in neighboring Argentina, Chile and Urugnay.

To be sure, Brazil has the usual assortment of Third Wedd winners and assortment of the state of the sta of Third World miseries — roaring inflation, $80 billioo in foreign debts and an awesome gap between haves and have-nots. Less common are Brazil's economic energy and its zest for politics. Its 125 million inhabitants are as ethnically diverse as the United Nations itself. As a theme for the oew session of the General Assembly, abertura strikes us as just fine. President Figueiredo's record argues plainly against the demeaning view that poor nations are somehow fit only for tyranny.

... and Maybe in Bolivia

For more than a century and a half, coupprone Bolivia averaged a new president a year, Lately the pace has quickened. Since 1978 seven chief executives have come and gone, with an eighth oow on his way out the door. The total does not include the one man democratically chosen by the Bolivian peo-ple, Hernan Siles Zuazo. Mr. Siles Zuazo's scheduled inauguration two years ago was blocked by a bloody military intervention.

The last two years have been catastrophic. The legal economy virtually collapsed under the pressure of rampant corruption, fed by the profits of the illegal cocaine trade. Some countries have shunned the La Paz regime for financial dereliction, others for drug traffickiog, and still others for buman rights violations, making Bolivia an international pariah. Washington at various times has objected to all three. The final blow came from Bolivia's unions, which this mooth braved repression to call a general strike against proposed austerity measures. Only a legitimately elected government now has any chance of repair-ing the economic damage.

The military rulers, getting the message at last, have called for the elected Congress to be reconvened. Although nothing can be certain in Bolivian politics, that should result in Mr. Siles Zuazo finally being allowed to assume office. A few weeks ago the Reagan administration was reported to be thinking of resuming oormal relations, pending an acceptable Bolivian economic plan. The latest turn, after diplomatic insistence from two U.S. administrations, suggests an important human rights lesson: Pressure helps.

-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

Brazil's Trade Medicine

The decision of the Brazilian government to tighten controls on imports is the latest evidence that the government of Gen. Figueiredo is prepared to do what it can to avoid the sort of financial debacle that has engulfed Mexico this year. In doing this it has grasped some octtles which other developing countries have besitated or refused to grasp.

The task facing Brazil is daunting. The president [admits] that the country's foreign debt might reach $80 billion by the end of this year. The financial burden involved in servicing this buge sum is very heavy indeed.

Brazil's efforts to trade its way out of its problems should not be impeded by shortsighted protectionism on the part of the industrial countries. There are several unresolved trade disputes between Brazil and the United States, although the recent deci-sion by the [U.S.] loternational Trade Commission not to raise barriers against a highly successful Brazilian-made commuter aircraft came as a welcome relief. To make Brazil's adjustment even more painful and difficult than it is already is not in the best interests of the industrial world.

Mrs. Gandhi Criticized

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's mission to Moscow, like ber recent visit to the United States, has not enhanced her stature as a the leader of the world's largest democracy. [In the United States] she had the audacity to liken the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghani-stan to the United States's involvement in El Salvador. No matter what Washington has done wrong in its relations with the Latin American nation, such an equation is both ridiculous and insulting.

Mrs. Gandhi is one of the few leaders of the free world who has oot been conspicuous for expressions of public regret over the bloodbath Moscow is imposing on the Afghans. She broke this silence, just a wee bit, during talks with Soviet President Lenoid Brezhnev. She expressed "serious concern" over the presence of Russian soldiers on the sovereign soil of Afghanistan. Then she watered it down by saying there are "two sides to the problem." We wonder how the prime minister would explain this partial defense of the Russian invasion to the people being shot at in Afghanistan. The remark makes one wonder just how "serious" is her "concern."

THERE I THINK THIS MAKES IT A LOT PRETTIER

Time for Ronald Reagan to Assess His Record

WASHINGTON — At the end of the American fiscal year and the beginning of another reappraisal of world politics at the United Nations, it would be helpful if President Reagan gave an account of his record as he sees it.

This he cannot do in press conferences of which

This he cannot do in press conferences, of which he has just given his first in two months. He has made a series of weekly radio broadcasts, which are essentially arguments against the Democrats, but he has delivered two distinguished speeches, one last November on the control of nuclear weapons and the other earlier this month on his vision of a compromise settlement in the Middle East, It is in these major pronouncements on policy that he has been the most successful.

But Mr. Reagan has not given a coherent explanation of the difference between his promises and his achievements, so that the people can judge for themselves as they approach the midterm congressional elections and the beginning of the last half of his elected term.

The immediate question is not merely what the Democrats think of his record, for they will emphasize his failures and minimize his successes. and they have few convincing answers of their own. The voters also have to know what the president thinks of the record, if the November vote is to be a judgment on his stewardship.

There are things to be said on his side. He has compelled a debate on the conomic assumptions of the less two executions. He has questioned the of the last two generations. He has questioned the growth of government power. He has insisted on a reappraisal of the military balance of power, and he has been faithful to his beliefs — but he has left the people in serious doubt about whether his proposed remedies are succeeding.

By James Reston

At home, he is ending the fiscal year with a defi-cit of around $150 billion. He has proposed a $92-billion, or 50-percent, increase in the defense budget over the next three years, and his projected tax cuts amount to $131 billion by 1985. This would leave him not with the balanced budget he promised but with the most spectacular deficit in the history of the republic.

Abroad, the record is on more reassuring. Mr. Reagan came to office promising to unify the Atlantic Alliance, but he has divided it (over trade with the Source business to the stars.) with the Soviet Union) more seriously than at any time since World War II. He wanted to increase the defenses of Western Europe with modern missiles, but the allies are reducing their defense budgets. Even the Senate Appropriations Commit-tee has voted to reduce U.S. forces in Enrope. In the confusion, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of the confusion, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany, Secretary Shultz's best friend in the alliance, is in deep trouble.

Accordingly, it is not unreasonable to ask whether the president's policies are achieving his objectives or opposing them. He wanted to keep China and the Soviet Union apart, but by his ambiguous policy about providing arms to Taiwan he may be encouraging them to get together.

Russia is in even more trouble than America, what with its difficulties in Poland and Afghanistan and its disastrous economic policy at home.

stan and its disastrous economic policy at home. But no doubt it is delighted by Mr. Reagan's split in the alliance over the Siberian pipeline to Eu-rope, and by his argument with Peking about arms for Taiwan. It is not Mr. Reagan who is now play-ing "the China card" against Moscow, but Moscow that is trying to play it against Washington.
"As regards Asia," Mr. Brezhnev said the other day in Baku, "we would deem it very important to achieve a normalization, a gradual improvement of relations between the U.S.S.R. and the People's Republic of China on a basis that I would describe Republic of China on a basis that I would describe as that of common sense, mutual respect and mutual advantage." Mr. Brezhnev has seldom spoken so moderately. The Chinese leaders reacted cautiously, but they will be receiving a Soviet delegation soon to discuss reconciliation.

Mr. Reagan did not come into the White House anticipating that he would preside over such deficits at bome or such alarming tangles abroad at the end of this fiscal year, He is still convinced that his surply-side economics will work at home and that supply-side economics will work at home and that he can hold the alliance together, help the Poles and the Afghans, and intimidate the Russians with his defense budgets and his pipeline sanctions—and that if his policies don't work, it is the fault of the Democratic and the allies.

He seems to be about the only person in town who thinks he can defend these policies, with 10

Some of his advisers have warned him not to make his record, bad as it is, a test of his economic and anti-communist policies in the November elections, but he thinks his record is pretty good, and is apprently willing to defend it anyway.

President Reagan is very good at set speeches, the best we've had in Washington since Roosevelt. And like Al Smith, be says "Let's look at the record"—which is fair enough.

Beirut, the 'Vietnam Syndrome' and Rearming

WASHINGTON — If they said it once, back in 1980, they said it a bundred times: Ronald Reagan and the Republicans would restore American prestige abroad. They would rebuild America's dangerously inade-quate arsenal. The United States would command respect again after the humiliations of the Iranian hostage crisis, Afghanistan and the ultimate ignominy, Vietnam.

So why were United States Marines the last to land in Lebanon, and wby were they the first to leave, the first time around? How come the French and the Italians are in the vanguard of the multinational effort to supplant the other armed foreign-ers (Israelis, Syrians, PLO) by way of building stability and tranquillity into Lebanon? Why are U.S. Marines being solemnly guaranteed the sort of working conditions — "a non-hostile environment" — that you would want if you were planning to deploy, say, the Salvation Army?

say, the Salvation Army?

It's the "Vietnam syndrome," say a lot of analysts: a still powerful distinctination to use force, or get involved, or risk the awful quagmire of escalating entanglement. And that is surely part of it, judging from the bipartisan hand-wringing and sharp questioning in Congress and from the public at large. But there is something else at work which is even more dangerously debilitating, because it springs from nants of PLO forces have been re-ideological conviction. Once installed in office, most administrations seek some pragmatic way around campaign rhetoric that complicates the exercise of power. But the Reagan administration, shattering tradition, remains thoroughly hung-up on the ideology it proclaimed two years ago: America's prestige and influence derive almost entirely from the quantity and quality of its arms; and on both counts the country was in a poor way to stand up against threats to its security.

There is a refreshing consistency in this. But there is also a foolbardy consistency when, as in the case of Lebanon, the Reagan administration, in its rush to stand tall, takes on an assignment and assumes responsibility that would seem to be all out of proportion with the means and methods it is willing to employ.

The contradictions came through loud and clear in a recent interview in The Washington Post with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. The mission of the U.S. Marines, he said, was to help the Lebanese "reasert their sovereignty." If this means any-thing, it means hanging around until position to maintain law and order. We have seen all too horribly what happened in the Palestiman camps when the U.S., French and Italian forces left prematurely, and largely on American insistence.

Mr. Weinberger says the multinational force is now supposed to "in-terpose itself" as a "deterrent to any adverse actions against the new Lebanese government." Now that is dangerous work. By definition, deterrence carries no guarantee that it will have the desired effect.

Yet Mr. Weinberger insisted re-peatedly that even while "the foreign policy of the president is to return peace to Lebanon as quickly as possi-ble," his every emphasis was going to be on avoiding loss of American lives. The "Vietnam syndrome," be said, was a big element in this caution. But "we are not guiding our conduct en-tirely on that." There are other lessons to be learned from Vietnam, he said, notably that no foreign policy works without the "understanding" of the American people.

What Mr. Weinberger was really saying was that public confidence in

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

U.S. foreign policy depends on the restoration of U.S. "military strength and capability." He said that the process was under way. But he also said that it would take "six or seven more years of very resolute determination and a willingness to face the fact that there is no way that it can be done without large expenditures."

And oothing, he seemed to be suggesting, would undermine that determination more than a costly or inconclusive military adventure in Leba-non — with all the impact it would have on public sensitivities.

And so, he concluded, efforts must be made in the course of the military buildup "to minimize any kind of risk or loss of life to the Americans who are asked to perform those froot-line duties." Everyone should understand, he said, that this "totally worthy objective ... does not mean we are going to be weak."

Maybe not. But any military presence in Lebanon is a high-risk enterprise. If public "support" and "understanding" are all that crucial — in Lebanon and in the larger strategic argument for American rearma-ment — it is tempting fate to promise the public that nothing unpleasant will be permitted to happen to the U.S. Marines in Lebanon. Mrs. Gandhi Balances India's Act

By Jonathan Power

TEW DELHI — Indira Gandhi is back home after her Moscow visit. Considering that this was her first visit there since her return to power in 1980, she might have been expected to make more of it. After all, hadn't India refrained from voting at the United Nations to condemn the invasion of Afghanistan?

What is apparent is how much

ing at the United Nations to condenn the invasion of Afghanistan?

What is apparent is how much more subdued this visit was than her trip to Washington two months before. Her week in the United States was projected as a significant foreign policy development, healing old wounds, making friends and reaching ont to encourage economic and technological assistance for an economy that is increasingly more open and competitive. Io Moscow, Mrs. Gandhi not only kept the temperature cool but made sure with her sharpesi public reference so far to the Soviet presence in Afghanistan that her hosts should not expect an over-warm embrace in the immediate future.

Still, apart from a toughening of the Indian posture on the Afghanistan issue, nothing has really changed. India remains angry with Washington for planning to sell F-16s to Pakistan, and Moscow's $1.63-billion arms deal on handsome terms is still going ahead. If anyone wants to make a case that Mrs. Gandhi is more pro-Soviet than pro-American, there is plenty of evidence around.

But this is to miss the point, India has had a friendly relationship with

But this is to miss the point, India has had a friendly relationship with the Soviet Union since the days of Mrs. Gandhi's father. For the fore-seeable future, the relationship will remain reasonably close. This is dic-tated by geographical proximity and by India's difficult relationships with Pakistan and China, but not, on the whole, by ideological affinity, Ideo-logically, India is basically pro-West-ern. It is a parliamentary democracy and its economy is directed west-ward, and increasingly so. It was Prime Minister Nehru who, along with Nasser and Tito. Mrs. Gandhi's father. For the fore-aloog with Nasser and Tito, pioneered "nonalignment" — the art of walking a tightrope between the poles of the protagonists of the Cold War. At the outset of the Korean War India condemned North Korean aggression, but it later protested against the UN military command's against the UN minutary command a decision to extend the war north of the 38th parallel. Nehru condemned the British-French Suez intervention in 1956, but muted its criticism of the Soviet move into Hungary.

Affinities

Looking back at this early period of Indian foreign policy, few histori-ans have charged that Nehru was a communist sympathizer. It is clear in retrospect, if it was not always clear at the time that the official with Part retrospect, if it was not always clear at the time, that the affinity with Brit-ain and the United States was strong. Resentment of John Foster Dulles's policies for containing the Soviet Un-ion and for extending military aid to Pakistan encouraged Nehru to keep the distance he did. But the distance was always carefully controlled, and he and Indian public opinion oever allowed it to grow too far.

Mrs. Gandhi has continued in much the same vein. Even when her Congress Party was in schism at the end of the 1960s and she was pushed leftward in search of parliamentary support, she managed to maintain the balancing act. India firmly rejected Mr. Brezhnev's proposal for an Asian collective security system. And al-though India criucized U.S. bombing of North Vietnam, Mrs. Gandhi did not take public issue with overall American policy in Vietnam until very late in the day. When she swept back to power in 1980, many observers were taken aback by her quick reversal of India's position on Afghanistan. Yet the decision was not out of character for a country whose fear of China and Pakistan is a dominant preoccupation.

Mrs. Gandhi has advoitly made sure the pendulum does not swing too far. She has gone out of her way this far. She has gone out of her way this year to court Mr. Reagan and to be cool to Mr. Brezhnev, and she is firming up her military links with France and Britain. Her performance at the Cancúo summit showed that she did not believe that India's economic alments would be solved by joining the Third Would's recipility that they are the state of the court of Third World's socialist bandwagou and demanding the immediate intro-duction of a "new international or-der." She had already made the decision that the most powerful way to address India's needs was to open up the economy to Western competition and to deal rigorously with self-imposed bottlenecks at home. Friends and Corpses

President Reagan has expressed his horror and revulsion at the massacre of Palestinians in Beirut. This is very commendable of him and I trust that no one, whatever his views on the Middle East, will hold it against him.

But this is the same president who so strongly criticized his predeces-sor's human rights policy on the grounds that one ought to stick by one's "friends" in the world, whatever they may do in the way of enforcing their own views of national security. The Beirut massacre was committed in an area militarily con-trolled by a friend, Israel, and by Christian militiamen who must at least count as friends of a friend. Is there a change of policy here? Has President Reagan decided to turn against friends, or friends of friends, who persist in embarrassing American foreign policy by turning defenseless human beings into accus-ing corpses? I would like to believe so. The president might prove the point by returning his attention to his own hemisphere and revoking the buman rights certification his State Department recently produced to aid the government of El Salvador, Or do some corpses stink more than others? HERBERT S. LEVINE.

How Many More?

How many more massacres must be committed against Palestinians before the world media sound the before the world media sound the alarm? It is no exaggeration to say that more attention is paid to animals in danger of extinction than to Palestinians. Must they, too, become an endangered species before the world is joited into acknowledging that Palestinians have human rights?

I want to express my brotherhood with all those Israelis and Jews who oppose Israel's present leadership.

Food for Africans

Regarding "Time Is Short for Africa on Food" (IHT, Aug. 24) and the letter from Montague Yudeiman (Sept. 15): It is an anomaly of the African food situation that all the agencies assisting African governments claim that their programming is successful even as they acknowledge the failure of overall efforts.

The facts are incontrovertible: Neglect of appropriate policies in many African countries has meant the relative ineffectiveness of assistance projects in food and agriculture; and research and assistance for food crop production to meet domestic needs have been seriously neglected in favour of export crops. Growing hunger and food-import dependence in Africa are due to these biases, which international aid agencies have not succeeded in correcting despite good intentions and large investments.

The World Food Council report of the African food problem is drawn directly from the reports of the international agencies — including the World Bank. The World Bank's approach is well summarized by its 1981 report on sub-Saharan Africa, which concludes that "efforts should be focused more sharply on established coursed more snarply on established commercial crops, where the technology is confirmed, a market already exists and valuable spin-offs for food crops can be obtained. Projects based entirely on food crops should be small and pilot in nature."

Mr. Clausen's commitment to increasing food production in poor countries is important. He will want to review whether "small and pilot projects" will be adequate to turn the tide of growing food deficits and hunger in poor Africa.

China Rejects Thatcher's Argument That Treaties on Hong Kong Are Valid

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

BELJING — The Chinese government, it a rebuke to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, asserted Thursday that it was not bound by the old treaties coding parts of Hong Kong to Britain and would recover the entire colony "when conditions are ripe."

Her remarks appeared to reflect the line she took in her talks with China's paramount leader. Deng Xiaoping, and prime minister, Zhao Ziyang, last week, but their public resteration in Hong Kong evidently stung the Chinese.

The Chinese reply was first given orally to some foreign journalists who requested a reac-tioo and was later released in a full version by the New China News Agency. It said: "Hong Kong is part of Chinese territory.

The treaties concerning the Hong Kong area signed between the British government and the government of the Qing Dynasty of China in the past are unequal treaties which bave never been accepted by the Chinese people. The consistent position of the government of the People's Republic of China has been that China is not bound by these unequal treaties and that the whole Hong Kong area will be recovered

Prosperity, Stability

The Foreign Ministry, paraphrasing the joint statement read by Mrs. Thatcher at a news conference in Beijing last Friday, went on to say that "both the Chinese and British sides say that both the Chinese and British sides hope to maintain the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong and therefore will hold discus-sions through diplomatic channels."

The Foreign Ministry statement asserted the Chinese claim in more forceful terms than had been done publicly during Mrs. Thatcher's visit, leaving an impression that China could reclaim Hong Kong whenever it chose to. The statement did not say when China thought the cooditions might be "ripe."

Deng Reportedly Faced Challenge by Military Before China Congress

By Michael Parks Los Angeles Times Service

BELITNG - A serious challenge to Deng Xiaoping's leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and to his pragmatic policies was mounted by a conservative mili-jary faction only three days before the party began its national congress this month.

Mr. Deng, now nominally the chairman of the party's central advisory commission but still the country's top leader, apparently overcame his critics, but probably at the cost of considerable compromises oo both the policies and rsonnel appointments approved by the congress.

He now seems intent at recovering the lost ground, defeating the generals who opposed his reforms and turning their challenge into a broad campaign against what Chioese leaders call the "ultraleft."

The challenge to Mr. Deng became known Wednesday, following the publication of a lengthy editorial by the military's Liberation Army Daily. The editorial retracted an earlier article in the paper that questioned not just son Mr. Deng's policies but also the effectiveness, dedication and even hooesty of his leadership.

Direct Policy Contradiction

The first article directly contradicted the policies adopted by the party congress, the editors of the Liberation Army Daily acknowledged, and it was written and published with this intent.

That article's author, Zhao Yeya, described as a senior army propagandist and clearly writing with the patronage of senior Chinese military commanders, went on to blame Mr. Deng and his sup-porters for a breakdown in morality, ideology and discipline that he

There had been no real improvement in China under Mr. Deng's leadership over the past four years, Mr. Zhao unplied, and perhaps there had even been a decline.

The "bourgeois liberalization" that Mr. Deng himself criticized was due, first of all, to a retreat from Maoist orthodoxy, the aban-donment of "class struggle" and "cootinuous revolution" as key principles of Chinese politics, Mr. Zhao asserted. The new leadership had failed, he implied, to reassert a strong ideological framework for the country.

Wary Truce

This criticism has long been voiced in military circles, which have grown increasingly disturbed by Mr. Deng's pragmatic social-ism. But a wary truce had been in effect since late last year between Mr. Deng's forces and the army. The "deal broke down," as a the new composition of the Polit-buro, Secretariat and Central ommittee. Mr. Zhao's article could not be published here without the approval and most likely the encourage ment of very powerful military commanders, and it may well have been intended to tell Mr. Deng and his allies that the army was not happy with plans for the party

The military did, in fact, force some compromises in the course of the congress, according to some Chinese sources here. One described the original article as a "sort of ultimatum" to Mr. Deng.

Program Said to Be Altered

Intensive negotiations led to the watering down of the party program, primarily on domestic economic and rural policies, and to the inclusion of additional army officers in the Central Committee and other high-level organizations, Chinese sources said.

"Faced with a military revolt, even a mini-revolt, at the last moment. Mr. Deng had to give in on both politics and people," a Western analyst commected. "Some compromises we can see a third of the Politburo is generals. a quarter of the Central Committee are active duty officers - and others we can just feel as we wonder why he did not go further with, say, retirements.

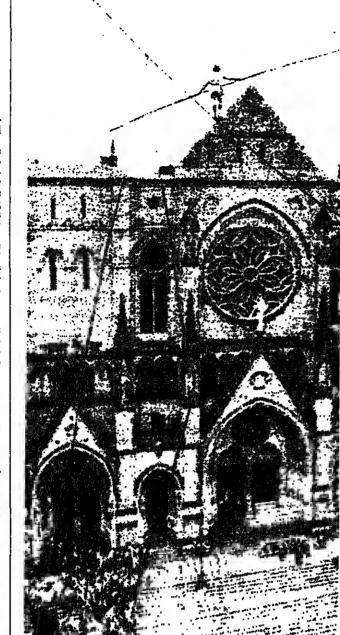

But another longtime observer of Chinese politics remarked, "This is the latest version of whether the glass is half full or half empty. Is Mr. Deng weak because be has been attacked in such an extraordinary way on the eve of the party congress and in the army oewspaper? Or, is he strong because he is now dealing with those responsible?

'Simply Wrong'

And a middle-level Chinese official who was extensively briefed this week oo the congress and its deliberations dismissed as "simply wrong" suggestions that there had either been a military revolt or that last-minute compromises had to be worked out to satisfy the generals. "On the contrary, they were told what was what," he said. "Deng will now move against those who thought they could force his

These developments were disclosed in the annual report of the Office for the Protection of the Constitution, West Germany's domestic intelligence agency. The re-port said that about half of those imprisoned were involved in the sale of embargoed items to East Germany and that most of the others were linked to deals with the Soviet Union.

Six of those sentenced were couriers or agents used for devel-oping contacts with West German companies. Two others were identified as Soviet secret agents. The Soviet Union and its allies, the report said, bave intensified their efforts in West Germany to acquire embargoed technology. The United States has been trying to get its European allies to tighten controls and expand the list of embargoed items. The report said that because of the restrictions the Eastern bloc has resorted to secret and illegal means of obtaining material they could buy openly in the 1960s and 1970s. It said that such countries have established new agencies in an effort to get technology that enables them to save huge sums in research and develonment costs.

The report mentioned the Soviet Union. Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Poland as being especially ac-tive in efforts to obtain embargoed technology from West German

A Democratic proposal, spon-sored by Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, to provide $1 billion for public service jobs was also rejected, 60-37. The mea-sure had been overwhelmingly approved by the Democratic-con-trolled House. The omnibus bill is needed to finance government spending in the new fiscal year because none of 13 individual appropriations bills has been enacted into law. The appropriations bills augment authorization bills, which set national policy, and conform to the budget resolution, which sets spending ceilings, revenue floors and spending priorities.

Edwin L. Dale Jr., a press spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, said that un-less the measure was enacted by 12:01 A.M. Friday, there would be serious disruptions of government service. In the past, however, such threats have been regarded as efforts to prod Congress into action and disruptions did not occur until

Although the interim measure would be in effect only three months, it could set a precedent that could mean the life or death of disputed projects. Such an ef-crat, to delete funds for the MX fort was made Wednesday by opponents of the Clinch River reactor, who failed to halt project funds by a 49-48 vote. Seventeen Republicans joined 31 Democrats in opposing the reactor, which is gned to produce more plutonium fuel than it consumes. The project's major supporter Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, the majority leader, told the Senate, "It's a national project of major importance."

'A Technological Turkey' Senator Dale Bumpers, an Ar-kansas Democrat, said the Government Accounting Office now estimates that the cost of the project has increased from $500 Ilion, its initial estimate, to $8.7 billion. "You'll spend $9 billion and you'll have a technological turkey on your hands."

Under both the House and Senate bills, the reactor would contin-ue to be financed at $199 million annually, the same level as in the current fiscal year.

The Senate shelved, 62-37, a proposal by Senator Jesse Helms, a North Carolina Republican, that would prohibit union dues or fees from being used for political purposes without the express consent of the individual union member. Such a proposal was seen as a threat to union political action committees, as well as to the politi-cal education campaigns that are carried out within unions. A Democratic proposal to extend unemployment benefits was rejected, 51-47. The proposal, by Senator Howard M. Metzenbaum of Ohio, would provide extended benefits to recipients in 11 states who have been disqualified, as well as to recipients in 18 to 20 other states expected to be disqualified by the end of the year.

South Africans Tell of Police Torture

JOHANNESBURG — Former South African detainees alleged in a report published Thursday that the security police had systemati-cally tortured them. They said they were mistreated in a variety of ways, including beatings and electric shocks.

The document cited 22 allega-tions of electric shock, 54 allegations of beating, slapping and

A Russian Satellite 'Finds' Downed Plane in Canada

GREENBELT, Maryland — Three men badly injured in the crash of a light plane in the backwoods of Canada last month were rescued after a Soviet satellite passing overhead radioed their location to a ground station near Ottawa.

The rescue resulted from a four-nation system that has been seven years in the planning. The Soviet Union and United States will build the satellites for it, and France and Canada will contribute ground stations and electronic equipment. Three months ago the Russians put into orbit the first of five satellites that will eventually cover the earth, listening for the distress signals of planes and ships.

This is the first time a satellite was the source for pinpointing the location of an air crash anywhere in the world," said Bernie Trudell, manager of satellite air rescue operations for the Goddard Space Flight Center.

The plane had crashed in a heavily wooded valley with high mountains on each side that blocked their rescue beacon from reaching passing planes. The Soviet satellite did hear the beacon, however, when it passed almost directly overhead the next day.

GREENVILLE, Texas - Monty Stratton, 70, a former pitcher with the Chicago White Sox whose at-tempted comeback in baseball after the loss of a leg was the subject of a popular motion picture, died of cancer Wednesday.

Mr. Stratton's courage inspired baseball fans across the United

Gastronomy, Under the Knife Of a Moralist

by Mary Blume

ARIS — The French have a reputation for frivolity thich, as anyone knows who lives here, is sadly unjustified. The won this reputation by thinking very seriously about what of people consider lightweight subjects: fashion and food.

Fashion has recently fallen into the hands of semiologists; anthropologist Claude Levi-Stranss wrote a book called "The Cook and the Raw." Gastronomy traditionally attracts the finest and most gorodsty trained minds. "Animals feed: man eats; only the man of inte of knows how to eat," Brillat-Savarin said.

Jean-Francois Revel is a man of most distinguished intellets leading named minds. "Animals feed: man eats: only the man of interest knows how to eat," Brillat-Savarin said.

Jean-François Revel is a man of most distinguished intellet a leading political philosopher, the widely translated author of "With! Marx or Jesus" and "The Totalitarian Temptation," former editor of the weekly magazine "L'Express" and now a columnist for "Le Point for many years a philosophy professor and the author of a history ophilosophy. He is a bit portly, with a fine Roman head and a dab hand making a boest en daube; he is well known in Washington's cornidors' power and in the major kitchens of France.

Revel's interest in gastronomy, while slightly adulters by the fact that he files a good meal, is lofty and pure. It has not good to do with mere feeding. "Chisine is a perfecting of nutrition. Gronomy is a perfecting of cuisine itself," he writes in "Culture an Luisine," just published in the United States by Doubleday, in which traces gastronomic theory and practice from the ancient Greeks to throwelle cuisine in 272 pages. He writes, he says, as a moralist rather the sa a historian because "cuisine is a normative art in which, as with gra mar, ethics and medicine, description and prescription can scarcely b parasted." The book is dedicated to his mother.

The genial first title of the book was "Un Festin en poles," which his publisher: claimed could not be translated into Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch that neither the Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch that neither the Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch that neither the Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch that neither the Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch that neither the Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch the translated into Engl but which suggests a certain lightness of touch the translated into Engl but of the bout the literature, because I think, without going to Bartha or Foucaultian extremities, the words are very important."

The book is informative and, since it is by vel, one of the few Frenchmen to speak disrespectfully of Descart t is provocative. He takes up the defense of Trimalchio, the Roma ch-boor, by praising him for the enormous trouble he went through entertain his guests, and he refuses to accept the tradition whereby such culinary art was revolutionized by Catherine de Medicis in 1533 ty's sole contribution, he states, was the refinement of manners and thrention of pastry and

He can be most categorical: "The Middle s." he states, "was the cra of seasoned stews, the Renaissance the at tasty sweetmeats." A book by two 18th-century Jesuits is "as instant in the history of cuisine as Parmenides's poem was in the high of philosophy." He divides cuisine into two sorts: the traditional ich is based on age-old skills, and the crudite, based on invention, real and experimentation. He thinks it's disgusting to put lobster inf bouillabasse or to grill loop, or sea-bass, in thyuse, "an heir never in to be caten—does one eat the tea leaves that remain in the bottor the teapor?" Of all the disciplines, cuisine, he says, has the greatend most naive belief in progress and decadence.

There is a lot of nonsense talked about c.e., Revel said in his sunny flat on the lle St. Louis, which seems care, wallpapered and uphoistered in books. "Quite often people say a cuisine is only possible in an affluent society. The implication is this reactionary to like good cuisine. But that is simply not true. Engla as much richer than Spain and Italy in the 18th and 19th century, a today is poorer than the United States but no one would say 10od is poorer. Portugal is poorer than Germany."

poorer than Germany.". New York's sudden passion for cuising vel says, simply reflects its position in the world. "It is something shows the wealth of the city. It was Alexandria in the first century it kome a little later. It was as difficult to find someone in Rome of the century who spoke Latin as it is hard to find someone who speaks ish in Miami. They are cosmopolitan cities full of migrant worker

Of Revel's various occupations, it being a magazine editor that made him think most about food. "The siness lunch. In America they are very light except for the famous the artinis, but it's very different in France. Even if you're having lunch a foreigner, because he's in Paris he expects to be taken to Tailley."

There also a cultural phenoment was something important the control of the contr ant to say to someone, he is outraged if you tell him to come to your office at 9:30. Lunch is the green light that tells him he's important."

There is a good deal of gamesmanship at the luncheon table, Revel says. "The people who at a restaurant that specializes in food from southwestern France ask for grilled fish and who ask for filet mignon in a fish restaurant — simply to destabilize the host." He has nothing against fast food and is relieved that his sons would rather eat at McDonald's than at the Tour d'Argent. "It costs less," he says.

In 1971 the translation of Revel's "Without Marx or Jesus" made him a hero in America because it stated that a bloodless revolution was in the process of occurring there. Revel still believes in the revolution but it was in fact Europeans that he was writing for.

"The first thing I wanted to explain to Europeans in 1970 is that

The first thing I wanted to explain to Europeans in 1970 is that contrary to the conventional wisdom in Europe, America was not basically reactionary. Why be patronizing and say America is in danger of becoming fascist when we had invented Nazism, Stalinism, Petainism, Francoism?

"The second point is that revolution takes place at the grass roots and American society has been changing all the time. In the 1960s the richest society in the world went through a profound change. True revolution is not a copy of a former revolution: it is something no one has ever seen.

"It has nothing to do with political regime. True revolution does not occur at the political level. America changed under Nixon. French society changed more under Napoleon III, which was a totalitiarian regime, than under the Third Republic.

"There were real changes which have been absorbed now, I think the only revolutions that succeed are the ones that are accepted in the long only revolutions that succeed are the ones that are accepted in the long run by the most conservative people."

Revel's next book was "The Totalitarian Temptation" in which he asks if in the soul or mind of man there is a wish to be governed in a totalitarian way. He is now writing a follow-up that studies the decline of democracy.

"In the struggle of power in the world now, the paradox is that the Soviet Union has a winning position on the chessboard at a moment when Communism is completely discredited as a political system."

With the unveiling of Maoist brutalities, the Cambodian bloodbath and the failure of Cuba, Communism all over the world has been proved an ideological and economic failure, Revel says, and yet the West gets weaker. They can take advantage of our weaknesses, we can't take advantage of theirs. Poland resulted not in sanctions against Russia but in the allies' falling out over the pipeline. "A not very clever philosopher named Adolf Hitler showed that very

The book will be 400 pages long and Revel so far has only an English title: "How and Why Democracy Will Die."
"It is a very sad book," he said. It sounds it, but after a very fine huncheon designed by Mr. Revel at a nearby restaurant, things didn't Pink peppercorns, another conceit of nouvelle cuisine advocates, only occasionally add interest to food. Aside from its suspected adverse effects on health — none of which I have experienced although I have eaten a lot of pink peppercorns — this hard, shelly berry adds an unpleasant grittiness to the foods it seasons. I have had it used effectively only by Freddy Girardes in his reservement in Criscips. Freddy Girardet in his restaurant in Crissier, Switzerland, when it was finely powdered and mixed with green and black peppercoms to adom steamed fillets of rouget. That way it added just a hint of exotic pungency that was bolstered by the other peppers.

10. American champignons, otherwise known as plain old mushrooms, are more symbols of mushrooms — bland, white, flavorless and so full of water that they must be sweated before they can be browned. When they are used in sauces and some it's a good idea to add some powdered dried mushrooms to make up for the lack of flavor.

11. Perrier is easily surpassed by the Italian San Pellegrino water for flavor and delicacy and just as easily matched by seitzer. Watch out in the United States for the ultrasnob cachet about to be attached to Khisu, the newly imported bottled water from South Korea at approximately the same price as Perner. Little distinguishes it but the green glass bottle with Korean calligraphy that makes a pretty bud

12. Olympia oysters, supposedly one of the glories of Pacific waters, have always seemed bland disappointments to me when I have had them in the so-called best places of Los Ange-les and San Francisco. Perhaps these tiny slips of oysters have more flavor in their native Oregon and Washington, but those I've eaten had virtually no flavor compared with the more saline bluepoints, Wellfleets and Cape Cods and the gently briny Bélons of France and brassy Limitords of Denmark.

I could make this a baker's dozen of overrated foods if I followed my inclination and added any crabment other than backfin homo crabmeat from Chesapeake Bay. Shanghai crab, tasted in Hong Kong, was a close second, but that much cannot be said for the black-tipped Cuban Moro crab, New Orleans crabmeat or any Dungeness 1 have eaten in California. But I reserve final judgment on the Dungeness, feeling that perhaps like Olympia oysters, the best examples can be found only in Washington and Oregon.

TRAVEL

To October, With Love

by John Russell

EW YORK - October is my favorite vacation time. Some people think that Dr. John Donne, the Dean of St. Paul's, had no warrant for what he told his parishioners in 1640 — that "In heaven, it is always autumn." But what he said is just fine with me. The very sound of the word October puts me in a good humor.

1 love the sharp click of the "Oc," as if somewhere in our heads a pistol were being cocked. Next comes the broad central arch of the "o." there's no telling where that arch may take us. Then the brisk little "b" pushes us out of the languor of summer and tells us to shape up for a long, hard and vastly enjoyable winter.

There is something definitive about October. It is the time when the last grain of vacation sand has been knocked out of the last sneaker. Every last boat has been dragged inland. Socks and ties are back again as facts of everyday life. Cardboard summerhouses are closed for the winter. Heat, water and light are cut off. The telephone talks to itself, or not at all. Masquerades are over, and identities redefined.

October in Europe is what I know best. It's fundamentally a Big City month, much as we may enjoy the first nip of the fall frost, the erratic bang-bang of the French "sportsman" as he blazes away at every least squirrel and, in England, what Alfred Lord Tennyson called "the mock sunshine of the faded woods."

It is a wonderful moment in Paris or Brussels or Amsterdam when the last brown leaf falls from the trees and we once again see bare perspectives and vistas unsoftened. Not only do we see more in October, but we hear more — the iron footstep of a horse four blocks away, the cry of the last surviving knife grinder (he, too, is back from vacation) or the bugle call from the barracks on the other side of the river.

October has, moreover, a range of atmospheric effects that not even summer can quite equal. At what other time do we see metropolitan mists that run the gamut from silver to deep purple? Or skies of quite so fierce and so freshly laundered a blue? Or clouds that are quite so white and so brisk? Or the tongues of fire that mark the burning of the leaves in London's parks? Or the celestial effect of autumn sunlight on the waterfront of Leningrad?

Wonderful too, are the blue smoke from the roast chestnut stands, the glow from the stoves on the newly glassed-in cafe terraces, the heaped oysters outside the fish restaurants, the unidentified and very small birds that turn up on menus all over Europe. (It doesn't do to be too squeamish about those birds, by the way.) Fall food is more various than summer food, and in one country after another the heavyweight game dishes challenge the heavyweight red wines as to which can make it more difficult for us to get up from the table. In Turin, the white truffle works its brief irreplaceable magic, and all over England there are a thump and a thud as pheasant and partridge fall dead from the air, to reappear in due time on the menu. If you like the theater, there are no two ways about it: Performances in October are crisper, sharper and in general more together than they are in high summer. It is a joy to walk around a big city in Europe and quiz the playbills, the concert programs and the operas in repertory. There is a special air of concentration about all these activities in October. Even where what is scheduled is something that may turn up year 'round, there is something irresistibly congenial about the gladness with which the locals approach the first "Don Giovanni," the first "Twelfth Night" or the first Archduke Trio.

Attention is fresh in all these areas. Productions are often new, and people are ready to take a flyer on them. No one has begun to think about Christmas. It's a time to make reputations (or lose them) and something of that communicates itself to the audience. The audience is likely, moreover, to be more cohesive than it is in the summer, with fewer foreigners, fewer people from out of town and none of the inamity that sometimes characterizes the great summer festivals.

Museums likewise are at their best in October. The crowds are smaller, the hours of daylight are not yet too short and if you have a favor to ask of the curators they are likely to be back at their posts. In the dealer's galleries you can almost bear the rise of the curtain in October, such is the pressure to get in early with something good. It's contagious, moreover. Even your friends will be more glad to see you in October, in hopes that you can slake their craving for novelty and wonted amusement. As hardly needs saying, October is not a major month for tourism. It may therefore be easier for you to fly when you feel like it, take the best train of the day on impulse and walk straight into the hotel you want most. (Watch, though for certain scourges of October — the motor shows, the book fairs, the boat shows and all the other unexpected crowd-pullers that can force you into the suburbs.)

Once in your hotel, you are likely to find that the concierge, the maitre d'hotel and all the other people who can make you life comfortable are not as harassed as they are in high summer. That dreaded form of words "What group are you with?" may not even enter their heads. You will be accepted as a member of that endangered species, the independent traveler, and they will knock themselves out in deference to your smallest

They will also be delighted to see that you are not traveling with young children. For better or for worse, your children are likely to be in school in October, and so will other people's. The October traveler inhabits a grown-up world, and need have none but grown-up concerns in mind. Many a marriage has been, if not saved, at any rate renewed and refreshed on that account.

October is good for ships, too, even if the schedules may be cut by three-quarters. As most business people have long abandoned the ship as a way of travel in or around Europe, and as almost every ship of any size is now orientated toward cruising, you may find it difficult to recapture the leisurely comfort and the superfine service with which the Channel packet was once associated as it crossed from Dover to Calais and back again. Bingo and the TV dinner are more likely to be your lot if you persist. But it's worthwhile to ask around. If you have plenty of time and something to read, the Rhine steamer has much to recommend it as it works its way toward the sea from Basel, and so has the Danube steamer

In this and other contexts traveling in October calls for research and resource. Neither the readymade nor the secondhand will do. Homework is fundamental. But in return for all this the traveler gets to penetrate his chosen city as a free and informed human being. I recommend it.

Frankfurt: More Than a Book Fair

by Anna Tomforde

RANKFURT — Most people know Frankfurt as West Germany's com-mercial capital, especially in October, when the annual International Book Fair brings some 5,500 publishers to display their wares, but it has much more to offer than the annual round of major trade fairs and the country's main stock exchange.

Frankfurt is situated roughly in the heart of West Germany, enabling the visitor to explore its picturesque surroundings. Rhine cruises, a river-boat shuttle on the Main, or a tour of the Spessart mountains and the Moselle valley are among the easily accessible attractions that can be arranged. The tourist office (Frankfurter Verkehrsverein), tel: 0611-252.737, will tell a visitor how to reach the appropriate agents.

The city itself has 200,000 inhabitants, and with a quarter of them foreigners, Frankfurt has a cosmopolitan flair. It is not unusual to come across shops run by Italians, Turks, Yu-goslavs. Spaniards or Greeks who came to goslavs. Spaniards or Greeks who came to West Germany for work during the prosperous years of the 1950s and 1960s when thousands of workers were imported.

A walk or bus tour through the city center or the suburb of Höchst will remind you that Frankfurt, despite the towering modern buildings and a tangled road network, has kept the charm of its past: The Römer, an elaborate 16th-century building with exquisite woodcarving decorations, is now the city hall. It looks on to the Römerplatz, the site for the annual Christmas market and other festivals. Other buildings in the historic city center are the Hauptwache, an 18th-century sentry house that has been reconstructed in its original Gothic style, the Paulskirche and the cathedral where German emperors were once crowned On touring these sights, the foreign visitor might feel it is a shame that Frankfurt failed to become the capital of West Germany by one vote in the parliamentary council of 1948.

Right now Frankfurt is preparing for its major annual event, the International Book Fair. probably the world's most important meeting place for the sale and acquisition of book rights and translations. Among the 300,000 titles on display when the fair opens next Wednesday, the visitor will find 86,000 new fiction and nonfiction publications. The event is primarily a trade fair: Books are not made available to the general public, and ordering is restricted to publishers, booksellers, librarians, wholesalers and literary agents.

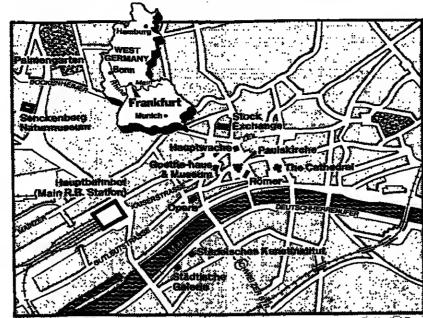

About 80 per cent of the exhibitors at the fair come from abroad, and most of the foreign exhibits are to be found in Hall 5 at the fairground. From Oct. 6 to 10, the fair is open to those in the trade from 9 A.M. to 2 P.M., and to the general public from 2 P.M. to 6:30 P.M. The entrance fee is 3.50 Deutsche marks ($1.40). Children below the age of 6 can enter free of charge and those below 14 have to be accompanied by an adult.

A central organization office will operate in the western wing of Hall 5, and all telephone inquiries to the fair must be made to 0611-

Frankfurt's international airport is a 30 DM taxi ride from the fairground and from the city's main hotels, but there is also regular hus service from the airport, and from leading hotels to the fair, as well as a direct underground line from the airport to the main railway station in the city center. From there, tramlines 16 and 18 go to the fair.

Frankfurt is not only books to the foreign. visitor this fall, although its literary pedigree is underscored by the fact that Goethe was born in the city in 1749, spent most of his youth here and wrote "Werther" here.

The Goethe-haus and an adjacent museum in the Grosser Hirschgraben are open to the public on weekdays from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M., but until 4 P.M. from October to March. ing hours on Sundays are from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. The Gothic building was damaged by Allied bombing in 1944, but most of its contents had already been transferred to safer places, so that much of the original furniture, ooks, pictures and manuscripts can be seen. The Städel museum, open from 10 to 5 except on Mondays, is famous for its collection of Dutch primitives and 16th-century German masters, including works by Dürer, Lucas Cranach the Elder, Hans Holbein the Elder, Rubens and Rembrandt.

The Senckenberg museum, open 9 to 4 except Mondays, is the largest natural history museum in West Germany, and the Palmengarten, a park in the city center, contains palm trees, other tropical plants and Alpine gardens. Frankfurt's zoo is famous for its collection and includes an exotarium where animals live in natural surroundings. (Open 8 A.M. to 7 P.M., but until 5 P.M., in winter.)

Frankfurt's opera has gained a reputation for being daring and exciting under the direc-tion of Michael Gielen. For tickets, telephone 2562-335 or 2562-529. This Saturday the opera is staging Verdi's "Masked Ball" with Mara Zampieri, Luis Lima, Georgeo Zancanaro and Claire Paull, with Judith Somogi conducting. And on Oct. 14, the Kammerspiel theater will show three one-act operettas by Jacques Of-

Frankfurt's old opera, which was destroyed during the war, has been restored and was reopened last year, with the old façade and a modern interior, and it is now Frankfurt's main concert hall.

The city's two main theaters, the Schauspiel and the Kammerspiel, are housed in the same complex as the opera. While the Schauspiel (2562-435) concentrates on elassics, the Kammerspiel (2562-435) is experimental and provocative, and shows mostly plays by contem-porary writers from East and West Germany. This fall's program includes "Bambule," writ-ten by Ulrike Meinhor, the journalist who became a leader of the Baader-Meinhof terrorist group and who died in prison in 1975.

The Theater Am Turm has maintained its reputation of the 1960s and '70s of being Frankfurt's most progressive and experimental stage. It has modified its left-wing image and is now the only stage in Western Europe that lends its facilities to free theater groups from West Germany and abroad. The TAT has no ensemble of its own, and the experiment is fully subsidized by the city.

Next Wednesday, the TAT has a premiere dedicated to Richard Wagner, "Erlösung dem Erlöser" ("The Redemption of the Redeemer"). The play and the music — presented in German — were written by Robert Moran of New York and the direction is by David Ostwald. The play, according to a theater spokesman, is aimed at "dismantling the myth" surrounding the composer. The box off-ice phone number is 1545-110.

As for accommodations, Frankfurt's leading hotels include the Park-hotel (double room around 200 DM), the old-fashioned and exqui-Frankfurter Hof (double around 200 DM) and the Hessischer Hor (double 250 DM).

The Park-hotel, apart from good food, has a Casablanca Bar modeled on the film. For hotel reservations, cootact the Frankfurter tourist office, which also organizes sightseeing tours. Frankfurt can accommodate 18,000 visitors in hotels, boarding houses and private rooms, but is often tight for space during peak fair times. The city of Offenbach, center of the leather industry, is about nine miles away and offers places to stay as well as some sightseeing attractions. Hotels in Offenbach include the Kaiserhof (double room 175 DM), the Euler (double 150 DM), and the Graf (double 125 DM). Additional accommodations can be found in Wiesbaden, the capital of the state of Hesse, which is 24 miles from Frankfurt.

Back in Frankfurt, the Frankfurter Hof (Steigenberger) at the central Kaiserplatz of-fers two of the best restaurants in town: the Restaurant Français, where visitors can expect to pay 250 DM for a dinner for two plus wine, and the Frankfurter Stubb, a cozy restaurant.

For the visitor who wants to see where bankers and businessmen enjoy good solid food and select wines, go to the Börsenkeller in the basement of the stock market. And Heyland's Weinstuben is a small and comfortable familyrun restaurant that specializes in venison and seafood, to be washed down with vintage wines. A lunch or dinner for two will cost about 100 DM, depending on the wine. For simple and good German food at moderate prices, try the Dippegucker.

Apart from hotel restaurants, Erno's Bistro, a French restaurant in Liebigstrasse, specializes in foie gras and lamb. Tables have to be reserved (tel. 721-997) and a bill of about 150 DM for two is usual.

Le Caveau is another excellent French restaurant hidden in a courtyard behind modern facades, only to surprise the visitor by its beau-tiful location in a 200-year-old wine cellar, Dinner for two can cost as much as 200 DM.

If you want to get away from the fashion-able side of Frankfurt, take a trip to Sachsenhausen, a suhurb on the left bank of the river Main that can be traced back to the 12th century. There you will find pubs and restaurants in tree-lined courtyards where the local drink, Applewoi (a rather dry cider), and local food are served inside and, in the summer, in the open air. Sachsenhausen also has the city's largest flea market, open Saturday mornings.

ELOUET. Morocco — A crumbling castle looms over the squalid village of Telouet, lodged deep in Morocco's High Atlas Mountains south of Marrakesh. To the north, painted peaks thrust up over 10,000 feet and the icy Oued Mellah, river of salt, slinks along to its basin.

As the visitor approaches the reddish stone-and-clay citadel, dogs, goats and ragamuffin Berber children will descend on his car. A dark, somber girl emerges from a nearby shanty and disperses the mob with a flurry of threatening curses. She carries a thick brass ring, heavy with giant keys, and a stick to keep her brothers at bay.

After inserting a 10-inch key in the ancient lock, she presses her weight against a huge studded door, which yawns open at last, allowing just enough space to pass. Inside is a disheveled courtyard, which leads to a labyrinth of halls, rooms and dozens of locked doors. Everywhere towers and walls are crumbling, doors falling off their rusted hinges.

Through a maze of musty corridors, the last great door is flung open and the visitor enters the harem, richly decorated with painted tiles, elaborately molded plaster and delicate wooden ceilings, carved and hanging. Rooms lead off in all directions, each with a new revelation.

This gloomy, ramshackle fortress and palace was the home of the Glaoui, the "Eagle of Telouet," who just three decades ago ruled Marrakesh and the south of Morocco. When he died, broken and humiliated, rakesh and the south of Morocco. When he died, broken and humiliated, in 1956, work was still in progress on Telouet's castle, once intended to house the world's most fabulous palace. Hundreds of craftsmen had nouse the world's most tabulous palace. Hundreds of craftsmen had worked for years on the grand reception rooms alone.

The precious furniture and most of the ornate marbles, tiles and inlays have been carted off to adom other palaces. What is left of the decor is chipped and cracked and carpeted with line red dust. Rooms where heads of state once paid homage to the Glaoui are now empty. Only the dark girl and her family linger to show the relies of an extinct dynasty.

In his book "Lords of the Atlas," Gavin Maxwell recounted the bloody history of the House of Glaoui: "The whole life in those great bloody history of the House of Glaoui: "The whole life in those great Atlas fortified kasbahs was one of warfare and gloom. Every tribe had its enemies, every family had its blood fends, and every man his would-be murderer." Till the end of the 19th century, the Berber tribe of Glaoua, from its seat at Telouet, controlled a key mountain pass leading from the pre-Sahara around Ouarzazate to Marrakesh and north Morocco; the nearby Tizi n'Tichka pass was not finished till the 1930s. In 1866 Madani El Glaoui was born to the Caid of Telouet and his Ethiopian concubine Sora, and 13 years later Thami followed. These brothers would rise to depose two sultans and, with the help of their French overlords, became the most feared men in Morocco for more than four decades. "The words of the Glaoui break stones," it was said.

The dark and willowy Madani, ruler of Morocco in all but name, lived in splendor at Marrakesh and Telouet until his death in 1918. Thami proved even more ruthless than his brother, stripping Madani's sons of their power and wealth and swelling his own harem of 96 wives with 54 of his brother's widows. Voices raised in protest found themselves echoing against the cold stones of Telouet's dungeon.

As an instrument of French colonialism for 37 years, Thami El Glaoui amassed wealth and military power. His despotic rule, based in Marrakesh, was cemented by modern French arms and a vast spy and the contract which was despoted to the contract to the contract of the contract to the contract of the police network that used murder, torture and imprisonment.

French propaganda made the Glaoui almost a cult figure in Europe in the 1920s and 1930s. He was the "Lion of the Atlas," the "Eagle of Telouet," the "Black Panther," seen as an invincible warrior (he received France's highest military honors) and a sexual superman. Maxwell describes him as "sober and dignified, with skin the color of dark terracotta and black eyes burning like coals." Thami nourished the myths with banquets and gifts, with his exquisite manners and diplomacy.

French intellectuals were taken with his image, at once cultivated and barbaric. A superb golfer, Thami hacked Morocco's first course out of the arid plains near Marrakesh. His friend Winston Churchill invited him to the coronation of Elizabeth II. police network that used murder, torture and imprisonment

From Finland, a Rare Musical Export

by Axel Krause

EMOURS, France - Finland's creativity in music never has projected as far as its accomplishments in design, but there are some notable exceptions: the composer Jean Sibelius and a handful of instrumentalists, first among them Arto Noras, a quiet-spoken, hard-driving try," says a Foreign Office official in Helsinki, "particularly with people who might have trouble finding Finland on a map."

"For mastery of the instrument and sheer musicality, he is perfect," says Paul Boufil, a French cellist who served last month as artistic director of an international cello festival in this medieval town 80 kilometers south of Paris. As part of Nemours's 13-day program, the 40-year-old Noras conducted master classes for 10 young French cellists, displaying and explaining his vigorous, agile style and approach to music.

With his tremendous concentration, he can play anything — brilliantly — which is why I came," explains Eric Rambour, 24, who has been studying the cello for 10 years.

Just before a concert in Nemours's church of Saint Jean-Baptiste in which Noras played works of K.P.E. Bach, Kodaly and Tchaikovsky, Jean-Pierre Wallez, who heads the Ensemble Orchestral de Paris, was discussing Finnish music and performers. "The Finns, often with unpronounceable names, tend to be timid and closed — and they are removed geographically. They have to be discovered, like their music," said Wallez, who has regularly invited Noras to the festival he organizes in Albi, in southwestern France. "You have to seek them out, as I have."

This summer at Albi, Wallez also invited

This summer at Albi, Wallez also invited Eero Heinonen, a lesser-known Finnish pia-nist, who attracted favorable reviews for his playing of Sibelius and particularly for a Schumann duo performed with Noras. "I am not saying that there are masses of brilliant, undiscovered musicians in Finland," Wallez continued, "bot there is considerable talent up there no one in the West has ever heard about, such as instrumentalists of all kinds and good orchestra directors, many in their 30s or 40s."

When cellists in general are discussed, it is impossible out to debate the undisputed tal-ents of Mstislav Rostropovich. Professional musicians, students, music critics and plain fans of the cello attending the Nemours festi-val generally agreed that the Russian is a su-berb cellist. But they also grumbled that his exuberance and showmanship allow him to overshadow other major cellists

"It is very difficult to class the top of our league," says Boufil, the solo cellist in Wallez's ensemble. "At the very top, there is really little difference in how well they play," he continues, listing — in addition to Noras — Lynn Harrell, Heinrich Schiff, Natalia Gutman and Yo-Yo Mah as well as the more elderly French cellists Andre Navarra (who also taught a mas-ter class and peformed at Nemours) and Paul

Arto Noras.

Tortelier, who was Noras's teacher in the early 1960s.

Most of the world's leading cellists know each other and some are friends. When Rostropovich visits Finland, for example, he invariably stays at Noras's spacious house just outside Helsinki, a relationship that goes back to 1966, when the Russian was president of the Tehnikowsky Competition jury in Moscow. Tchaikovsky Competition jury in Moscow.
Noras, who won second prize, was "the most harmonious of the foreign musicians," Rostropovich concluded, predicting he had "a very promising and excellent future."

Just as Rostropovich projects a decidedly warm, gregarious Russian image, Noras is every bit a Finn. Calm and reserved, he insists — when pressed — that Finnish creativity in music dominates the country's Nordic neighbors. In his schedule of roughly 90 concerts a year, Noras plays Finnish works whenever he can, while insisting that he is not an ambassador of his country's music. "I am not a particular connoisseur of Finnish music, for which there just is not that much demand," he says, noting that at a 13-day festival be runs in the scenic port town of Naantali in southwestern Finland, only an afternoon and an evening were devoted to his country's music.

"But then acceptance of modern music is always difficult, whatever its nationality," he

"We are a small country and much of our work is not known outside — with possibly a few exceptions," he continues, citing the works of such contemporary Finnish composers as Einojuhani Rautavaara, Joonas Kokkonen and Aulis Sallinen. Operas by Kokkonen and Salli-nen, performed by the Finnish National Opera at the Metropolitan Opera, will be presented for the first time in New York next spring.

But in his extensive repertoire, Noras lists only one cello concerto by each of the composers, who also are his friends, plus a sonata by Kokkonen. These works are in relatively strong demand throughout the Nordic countries, Britain and, to a lesser degree, West Germany. As for Finland's most famous composer, Noras notes that "Sibelius never wrote for the cello"

Noras is back now in Helsinki, teaching at the Sibelius Academy, which be entered at the age of 7 and which is a key training ground for the nation's musiciana. "If we leave out Sibelius, Noras is our best-known graduate," says Ellen Marjatta Urho, the rector. The academy has 1,000 students and draws on 300 teachers, including Noras. "He has helped put us on the

That view is echoed by Jean Grattier, the mayor of Nemours, who is already planning the town's second cello festival next year. "We still are not sure how things will work out, but there is a chance be will come back," Grattier says. How would a Finnish piece go over? "If played by Arto," says Boufil, "no problem."

Oil Firm Mergers New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Recent mergers involving oil companies have not significantly reduced competition in the industry and a legislative ban on such combinations is "unwarranted," according to the Federal Trade Com-Moreover, the commission said Wednesday, outlawing such mergers would tend to reduce industry efficiency by, among other things, inhibiting development of new oil supplies.

The FTC, which conducts most of the government's oil-related antitrust analysis, was responding to a request in January by congressional leaders of both parties to study the industry in light of some very large margar bids.

Among them was Mobil's unsuccessful offer for Concoo, which eventually wound up in the hands of Du Pont.

"The commission recommends against any legislative ban on oil-company mergers," the 298-page study concluded. "Such interference in normal market forces is unwarranted, both because there have been no significant adverse implications on the state of competition in the industry from mergers, and because mergers with significant competitive impact can be satisfactorily examined under existing laws.

Commissioner Michael Pertschuk, who served as chairman in the Carter administration of the control of the fadings.

tion, disagreed with several of the findings. Although he voted to submit the report to Congress, he preferred to call it a staff report rather than a commission study. Mr. Pertschuk also called for special legislation to deal with acquisitions by large oil companies and other major corporations.

In the waning hours of Congress last December, the House approved a bill to forbid the nine biggest oil companies to acquire any company ranked among the top 40 in the industry. This bill contained what supporters regarded as a major loophole, however, by giving either the FTC or the Justice Department, which share antitrust enforcement authority, the right to grapt assumptions. the right to grant exemptions. A companior measure never came to a vote in the Senate.

Wednesday's report also rejected several other contentions of oil industry critics. It said.

for example, that the increase in mergers had not diverted capital from the exploration and development of new oil sources and that the cost of planning and executing acquisitors, averaging under 1 percent of the purchase price, was not unduly high.

The commission said there were numerous reasons to account for the rise in acquisitions of oil companies, a prominent one being that the doubling of oil prices in 1979 made feasible a wider use of techniques for recovering additional oil from declining fields.

The commission also said, for example, that it did not think the acquisition of Marathon Oil by U.S. Steel or of Conoco by Du Pont hid Oil by U.S. Steet or or concer by raised prices or reduced oil availability.

In some cases, particularly the acquisition of Belridge Oil by Shell Oil, efficiencies seeme to result through the application of technical expertise. The commission staff said at a buding, however, that any such judgments of effi-ciencies should be left to the market and that the government should not weigh them in deciding whether a merger was anticompetitive.
Commissioner Patricia P. Bailey joined Mr.
Pertschuk in questioning some of the reports conclusions but said. "I do feel comfortable" with the main policy recommendation that mew legislation was needed. "The sheer and momentum of these mergers calls for the tougher government antitrust posture, not # unseemly agency scramble to get out of the way," she said.

The Hottest Thing on Wheels

by Samuel Abt

ARIS — After a month spent worrying about breakaways, punctures and time trials, Greg Lemond was brooding about jet lag, not usually a concern of professional bicycle racers accustomed to cru-sing speeds of 25 miles an hour.

Lemond had just finished a busy and successful September, and now he was going perstar of French bicycle racing, that meant La Crosse, Wisconsin, Reno, Nevada, and Sac-ramento, California. To offset the nine-hour flight from Paris to Chicago, Lemond decided to stay up until the early morning, then sleep through noon before boarding his afternoon "It's worth a try," he explained in the lobby of his airport hotel, well past midnight. "And even if it doesn't work, I'll probably bounce back pretty quickly. I'm young and strong.

Nobody can quarrel with the rider, and not only because he is 21 years old and looks remarkably fit at 5 feet 10 inches and 145 pounds. On Scot. 5 be finished second in the world championship road race for professionals in Goodwood, England, Two weeks later, on Sept. 20, he won the 10-day Tour de L'Avenir by 10 minutes 18 seconds, the largest margin in the history of the race for young professionals and the best of the world's ama-"His victory doesn't surprise me," said Ber nard Hinault, Lemond's leader on the Renault-Gitane team and four times the winner of the Tour de France, the world's most prestigious bicycle road race. "He's a super racer," continued Hinault, who did not ride in the Tour de L'Avenir. "I've always said it and 1 consider him my potential successor."

Only Lemond himself seems unawed by his victory. "I'm not in as good shape now as I was in the spring," he says. "If I hadn't crashed then, I really think I would have finished the season in the top five in the Super Pernod," an overall points competition among international riders.

Lemond missed two months of the season after his crash in the first kilometer of the Liège-Bastogne-Liège classie ou April 11. A photographer on a motorcycle pulled along-side him and asked Lemond to look his way. Obligingly, Lemond did, squeezing his hand-brakes. "It was real cold," he remembers, "and my brakes had iced up. 1 hit another rider, Didi Thurau, we both weni down and I broke my right collarbone."

He jokes about the accident now — "At least when 1 fell, 1 took out a rival" - but admits that the time lost ruined his hopes for most of the season. He returned to action June 2 in the Tour de Luxembourg, finishing 13th and helping Hinauli to victory.

Still considered too young for the Tour de France before 1984, Lemond took July off when all other competition ceased. He spent early August participating in eight criteriums, daily races in Europe's small towns, and then began training for the world championships.

"I trained really hard two weeks before the worlds," he says. "But the week before, I got sick, really sick, from bad water, I think. So five or six days before the race I decided to skip it and go to the Alps to train for the Tour de L'Avenir.

"But my wife's parents were coming to England all the way from Wisconsin and they had nonrefundable tickets, and my folks were coming too, so I was kind of obligated to go." He turns to his wife, the former Kathy Morris, and smiles. Courteous and low-keyed off his bicycle, be - like Hinault, his good friend has a reputation for meanness on it. ("When I race," Lemond admits, "my mind completely changes. I get much more aggressive.")

He shocked spectators at the world championships by leading the pack's final sprint against the leader, Jack Boyer, another American. It is probably not imprecedented to try to prevent a teammate from winning, but nobody recalls having seen it before.

Lemond remains unapologetic, "We were in the last 500 meters and Boyer only had about a 20-meter lead, which there was no way he could keep. I didn't think be could win it and I didn't want him to. He's just not a friend. He's never won a professional race and I didn't think he was the kind of guy who should be world champion. Boyer knew from the start of the race that we weren't friends and that we were both out for ourselves.

"I was wearing the U.S. jersey, sure, but there really wasn't a U.S. team and I definitely wasn't part of it. I paid for my own trip to England, my hotel bills, everything. There was no support from the U.S. federation. The team I was racing for was Renault."

Hinault, however, had dropped out long before the final sprint and, as Lemond led the chase after Boyer, Guiseppe Saronni of Italy shot by and won the title by five seconds. Lemond took the silver medal by two seconds over Sean Kelly of Ireland as Boyer faded to finish 10th, "I didn't realize Saronni was on my wheel," explains Lemond, still upset that he didn't win. His medal was the first for an American in a world professional bicycling

Lemond also won the first medal by an American in a world amateur bicycling championship, in 1979 in Argentina, where he captured the juniors title. "We were all so excited on the flight home, wondering bow many peo-ple would meet the plane. The team had done so well. We were thinking reporters, fans, maybe even a band. There was nobody, not even a federation representative.

"Bicycle racing isn't much of a sport yet back home. I want to help build the sport in the U.S. Maybe it'll take somebody winning the Tour de France to do it."

The "somebody" Lemond is thinking about took up the sport in 1975. He was born June 26, 1961, in Los Angeles, and says his father, a real estate salesman, "just wanted to get us out of the smog there." He moved the family to Lake Tahoe, Nevada, in 1968 and to "between Base of Court in 1968 and to "between later." Reno and Carson City" three years later.

Downhill skiing was Lemond's first sport hut then he began freestyle skiing. "Wayne Wong, a freestyle skier I admired, rode a bike for training and I began doing it too when I was 14, in the fall. That winter there was a drought, absolutely no snow, in Nevada or California, so I rode the bike all December and January instead of skiing.

"I finished second in a club race and then won the first official race 1 entered, for cadets between 12 and 15, and I got hooked. I read every magazine about bicycle racing I could and six months later decided I wanted to turn pro someday." He laughs about his enthusi-As a member of the U.S. Olympic team, he came to France in 1979 for training, won a professional-amateur race, the Circuit de la Sarthe, and finished third in the Circuit des Ardennes, winning a stage. "I attracted some attention and Cyrille Guimard, the manager of the Renault team, came and watched me one

It was nearly the wrong day. "I was chasing three Russians on a breakaway and I was 10 seconds from them and moving up fast when I punctured. It took the team car five minutes to get to me and the race was lost and I was so mad you wouldn't believe it."

"He threw his bike at the team car," his wife They cost me the race," Lemond says in rebuttal. Team cars are usually only 30 seconds away. "And then the mechanic told me I had to continue, for the good name of the

"Then he threw his bike into the grass at the side of the road," his wife continues. "So somebody said to Guimard. Do you want a racer like that?" and Guimard told him, 'Now I want him. He's got character.'

Lemond sits back on the couch in the hotel lobby, looking pleased with the support from Guimard, a team manager he says he likes and respects. He is not a bit abashed by the reminder that the way Guimard tells the story, he adds a line: "He's got character but no more nonsense like that.

Joining Renault in 1980, Lemond has been brought along carefully as the team's main hope to replace Hinault, soon to turn 28. Typical of his special handling is the early end to Lemond's season, which continues for most riders through October.

Instead the Lemonds were going first to Wisconsin to visit his wife's family and to have her father, a doctor, arrange for surgery on the rider's jaw. "They're going to break my upper jaw to correct my underbite," says Lemond, who wears braces. "After about two months in La Crosse, we'll go to Nevada and then to California, where I'll train. Some cross-country skiing, a bittle downhill maybe, some cyclocross, maybe twice a week, and some real ridering 80 to 100 bildenters, about two or three ing, 80 to 100 kilometers, about two or three hours, twice a week. We'll be based in Sacramento, where we have a condominium."

In Europe they live in Courtral, Belgium, "where we can get BBC TV in English and English magazines. A lot of people there speak English and it's convenient to France and Paris," where his team is based. Lemond says his spoken French is coming along. 'I can joke with the other riders or discuss technical things with them. Otherwise I can get along but I'm not too good on verbs." He plans to hire a tutor in the United States or take night classes.

He expects to return to France in mid-February and begin team training for the next season. The Tour de France, he maists, is definitely not part of his plans before 1984 and possibiy 1985, when he will be 24,

After Lemond's victory in the Tour de L'Avenir, Hinzult, amid his praise for the inner, said he did not think Lemond was "hard enough" now for the tour. "What he meant," Lemond explains, "was

I'm not hard enough yet to attack the Tour to win. You've got to be mature, physically strong to win. I think I could get 15th, maybe even be in the top 10 next year. But that's not what I want. What I want is to win the Tour de PPG Industries is reorganizing its European glass management to re-flect its acquisition of Boussois S.A., a French glass maker.

In April PPG bought Boussois S.A. a French glass maker.

In April PPG bought Boussois from the BSN group, a Paris-based food products group, for $40 million. John D. Pallone, who has been named general manager of European glass operations for PPG, said the company believed its position in Europe "was rather small, and we wanted to increase this." The acquisition "makes us the No. I glass producer in the world in terms of quantity," he said.

Mr. Pallone said glass accounts for about a third of PPG's sales, which in 1981 were $3.4 billion, up 6 percent from 1980; earnings were $211.2 million, up 1 percent. Pittsburgh-based PPG makes flat glass, industrial chemicals, coatings and resins, glass fiber and other products.

Based in Paris, Mr. Pallone is responsible for overseeing PPG's European glass business, which includes flat glass production and fabrication of products for the construction and transportation industries. Mr. Pallone previously was managing director in Genoa of Vernante Pennitalia, PPG's Italian glass subsidiary.

The company inoved Alfred G. Jensen into Mr. Pallone's spot. Mr. Jensen had been director of international glass operations in PPG's Pitts-

Jacques Calvet, a former banker, has been named vice chairman of the Pengot group. Mr. Calvet, who joined the company last June, thus becomes the second-ranking official at the group level, reporting to Jean-Pant Parayre, chairman. Company insiders said the move represents a tightening of the group's direct control over the Pengeot and Citroen operations and that it is linked to emerging financial and investment strategies of the group.

Mr. Calvet formerly was president of Banque Nationale de Paris, and from 1970 to 1974 he was chief of staff to Valéry Giscard d'Estaing when the former French president was finance minister.

Hongkong Land Posts 17.5% Earnings Gain

Compiled by One Staff From Dispotcher HONG KONG — Hongkong Land Co. and Jardine, Matheson & Co. both reported healthy first half profit gains Thursday despite the economic slowdown and property market shimp here. Hongkong Land, the colony's iargest property company, said its profit before extraordinary items profit before extraordinary items rose 17.5 percent from a year before to 543 million. Hong Kong dollars (386.5 million). Fardine, a diversified trading busineary, reported a 20-percent pain to 298 million dollars.

Each of the two companies owns about 40 percent of the other and Reuters quoted analysis as estimating that 50 to 60 percent of Jardine's comings come from its holding in Hongkong Land.

Though property prices have

Though property prices have tumbled in Hong Kong over the past two years, the analysts and Hongkong Land has been burt less than other property companies because much of its property is in the Central district of Hong Kong Island, where prices have been firmer.

The commany's managing director, Trewer Bedford, said Thursday that demand for office space remains strong in Central. To illustrate his point, he said about 80 percent of the office space and all of the retail space in the first phase of the nearly complete Edinburgh Tower in Central has already been rented.

More than 98 percent of Hong-kong Land's total commercial portfolio is occupied, Mr. Bedford

As a hedge against property weakness, however, Hongkong Land has diversified. Earlier this year it bought holdings of 34 per-cent in both Hongkong Electric Holdings Ltd. and Hongkong Telephone Co.

Jardine has been burdened in recent years by a heavy debt load, largely piled up in an expensive stock and asset swap with Hong-kong Land in 1980, a move designed to defend the companies from the threat of being taken over by local Chinese interests. David Newbigging, chairman of Jardine, said the company's debt-to-equity ratio is now lower than the 72 percent at the end of last year, but he did not elaborate.

Profits from Jardine's international operations gained in the first half, especially in the Middle Southeast Asia and Britain, Mr. Newbigging said. Reflecting the overseas gains, he said, the contribution from Hong Kong to full-year earnings will be slightly lower than last year's 70 percent.

Jardine's activities include insurance, merchant banking, property and sugar production.

Both companies predicted high-er profits for the full year. Mr. Newbigging said he expects profit growth in the second half to be similar to the 20 percent recorded in the first six months.

Hongkong Land raised its first half dividend to 14 Hong Kong cents a share from 12 cents. Jardine declared a dividend of 23

London Uncorks A New Financial Futures Exchange

By Steven Rattner New York Times Service

LONDON - With champagne and more sedate beverages flowing freely in the galleries, the London International Financial Futures Exchange made a rancous entrance Thursday into the frenzied world of currency and interest rate trading.

While the sound of the opening bell still reverberated through the 138-year-old Royal Exchange building, small groups of traders wearing brightly colored jackets began gesturing and shouting, bringing new excitement to a cavernous room on a site that first served as a marketplace in 1517.

"It's obviously a very exciting day for us," said John Barkshire, chairman of the new market and chairman of Mercantile House Holdings. "It does look as though it's got off to a good start on the first

F.W. Woolworth to Sell U.K. Unit To a New Group of British Firms

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
LONDON — A British group announced Thursday that it has agreed to buy control of the British chain of F.W. Woolworth stores and said it would try to return the retailer to profitability.

The newly formed British group, Paternoster Stores, said it already had agreed to pay F.W. Woolworth Co. 82 pence a share, or £163 million ($278 million), for the U.S. company's 52.6-percent stake in the 73-year-old British chain. The 82-pence offer is also being made to other shareholders of

WASHINGTON — In a strong indication that the U.S. economy remains in the grip of recession, the government reported Thursday that its index of leading indicators sank by 0.9 percent in August, while initial claims for unemploy-ment benefits soured to a record in

The new figures add to the fear that memployment, already at a postwar peak, is likely to climb past 10 percent and stay high for months to come, analysts said.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said he was "confident" that the economy would recover in the final three months of this year, despite the dip in the leading indi-cators. However, he said the unemployment rate would not come down much until "three, four or five" months after a recovery be-

year or beginning of next year."

"We intend that Woolworths should remain a major force in British retailing," said John Beck-ett, a former chief executive of British Sugar Corp. who has been named chairman of Paternoster.
"It is still one of the U.K.'s great retailing institutions, but it has not changed with the times." The chain, known as "Woolies" in Britain, where it is the fifth-largest non-food retailer, had a loss of $6 million on sales of $836 million in this year's first half. The Paternoster group was organized by Charterhouse Japher, the

Ottawa, 4 Banks Agree On Dome Refinancing

TORONTO - The Canadian sovernment and four major banks stepped in Thursday with the equivalent of $811 million to rescue Dome Petroleum, the big independent oil company whose severe debt problems had alarmed bank-not resume Thursday.

The plan was immediately criticized by stock analysts, who said the refinancing will be made at the expense of shareholders. They were critical of the almost fourfold growth in the number of common shares that could result from the new convertible dependences that Dome will sell to the banks and government to get new cash.

agine" for shareholders. "The stock will have to go down. It would have been better for Dome to go through bankruptcy."

'Mind-Boggling' "It's a good deal for the government," said Robert Reid of Mcleod Young Weir. He added that "the market was not expecting such a dilution" of stock.

"It's unbelievable and mindboggling," said John Stevens, an analyst with the investment firm of Brown Baldwin Nisker in Toronto. Dome defended the plan as being in its best interest, saying in a statement from Calgary, Alberta, that it believes the deal will solve its cash flow problems.

In addition to the sale of debentures, the plan involves extending to 10 years the repayment terms of a substantial portion of Dome's debt of 7.4 billion Canadian dollars. The banks and Ottawa will buy 1 billion Canadian dollars' worth of 10-year class A debentures, which for seven years will be convertible into Dome common shares. Existing shareholders will be able to buy 1,000 Canadian dollars' worth of class B debentures and half by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Montreal the Toronto Dominion Bank and the Royal Bank of Cana-

The conversion price into common shares for all the debentures starts at 2.50 Canadian dollars a share and rises to 5 Canadian dollars a share over seven years. The debentures will carry interest rates of 1 percent above the Canadian prime rate. However, in the first two years the interest will be paid in Dome common shares.

Analysts said that, using the full conversion terms, the number of outstanding shares could rise to 800 million to 900 million shares outstanding from about 220 million currently.

Mr. Mote at Bache said Dome's earnings and cash flow per share will plummet with the dilution. He said the stock, which was at about 5 Canadian dollars a share before trading was halted last Thursday. had been expected to rise to 11 dollars a share in 1983. However. with the dilution, the trading range will more likely be 4 dollars next

NEW YORK -- The Dow Jones industrial average closed below 900 for the first time in a month Thursday as prices on the New York Stock Exchange came under pressure from an increasingly gloomy economic outlook.

er throughout the day, especially after the Dow fell below 900 at midday. Analysts said much of the market's recent declines were a natural adjustment after the latesummer rally, which pushed the Dow up more that 150 points in six weeks. However, stock prices were also under pressure from a variety of underlying factors involving the outlook for the economy and interest rates. One of the most significant of those factors Thursday was for each 500 shares owned.

Analysts said there was a growing perception on Wall Street that the economy will remain weak at least until the end of the year. Third-quarter corporate earnings, which will start coming in next week, are expected to be poor. Investors were also concerned that declines in interest rates may have ended for the near term, The closely watched federal funds rate, on overnight loans be-tween banks, rose as high as 11¼ percent from Wednesday's close of 10 percent, and no other major banks have followed Bankers Trust's lead in cutting the prime rate to 13 percent from 131/2. Blue chip, technology, drug and

Tang to Buy McLouth Steel Assets

DETROIT - McLouth Steel said Thursday that it had agreed to sell "substantially all" its assets to a subsidiary of Tang Industries. The agreement is subject to approval by McLouth's secured lenders and U.S. bankruptcy court and to other conditions, a McLouth statement said.

The steel company refused to disclose the value of the transaction, saying the figure would not be available until late October after legal language for the transaction is worked out.

McLouth, which has 3,000 workers at two plants and is the 11th largest U.S. steelmaker, filed for protection under Chapter 11 of U.S. bankruptcy law last Dec. 8. Tang's subsidiary expects to continue the manufacturing, processing and sales activities of McLouth, the state-

Elf-Aquitaine, Statoil Sign Gas Deal

STAVANGER, Norway — France's Elf-Aquitaine group signed a contract Thursday with Statoil, the Norwegian state oil company, to buy about 600 million cubic meters of Norwegian natural gas a year for at least 20 years, Elf-Aquitaine Norge announced Thursday.

The Elf subsidiary noted that the deal comes on top of the gas delivery agreement that Statoil signed Sept. I with the seven-company European gas consortium for deliveries of Statfjord gas worth about 75 billion kroner ($11.1 billion) from 1986 until well beyond 2000. Elf gave no details about the sales price in the latest contract. However, a company spokesman estimated the Statiford portion of the Elf deal at 8 billion to 10 billion kroner. Elf and Statoil also signed an agreement for deliveries of gas from two other fields, Gullfaks and Heimdal, starting in the early 1990s.

Fiat, Alfa in Joint Production Deal

Penney Files for Debt Security Offer

NEW YORK — J.C. Penney Co has filed a shelf registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission for $500 million of debt securities, the company said Thursday.

It said the registration will permit the company to offer all or part of the securities periodically in amounts and at prices to be determined at the time of sale, without further filing at the SEC. Net proceeds will be used for general corporate purposes, Penney said.

Grace Says 3d-Quarter Income Down

NEW YORK - W.R. Grace and Co. expects its operating income for the third quarter to be significantly below that of the same quarter last year. The company said this was due principally to a decline in use of its land-based drilling rigs and lack of improvement in conditions burting its agricultural chemicals business.

Grace made the projection in a shelf registration filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission covering $300 million of debt securities, proceeds from which are expected to be used to repay commercial paper borrowings and bank borrowings under a short-term credit facility.

U.S. Senate Passes Landmark Bill to Aid Thrifts

By Kenneth B. Noble

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The Senate passed landmark legislation Thursday to aid the United States' alling savings institutions and give them broad new investment and lending powers similar to those of com-mercial banks.

Approval of the measure, agreed on Wednesday by a Senate-House conference committee, means that the savings banks stand a strong chance of finally winning substantial federal saving substantial federal saving suprains tial federal assistance in their two-year effort to survive under the pressure of unusually high interest

The bill now goes before the House for final approval, expected before the current session of Con-gress ends this weekend. President Ronald Reagan is expected to sign the bill. It also contains provisions affeeting commercial banks and credit unions. In particular, it directs federal regulators in devise within two months a new type of account for commercial banks, savings banks and savings and loan associations that is "directly equivalent to and competitive with money market funds."

The action gives federal regulatory anthonties the power to issue government-backed promissory notes to bolster the net worth of savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks.

For the first time, it would also permit savings institutions, includ-ing federally chartered credit uninns, to make commercial and agricultural loans as well as to continue issuing the real estate mort-gages that have been their tradiional investment. Cost of Freds

The need to bolster the assets of thrift and other financial institutions results from months of high interest rates that have pushed the cost of funds — the interest the thrift institutions pay their depositors — higher than the income they have been getting from mortgages and long-term bond portfolios, most of which predate the sharp

Savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks lost $6.4 billion last year. This has pushed large numbers of associations to the brink of insolvency and has prompted an unusually high number of consolidations. At the end of last year, 801 institutions, representing $167 billion in assets, were at or below 3 percent of net worth - the amount by which assets ex-ceed liabilities. Last year also saw 296 mergers, more than double the

The bill approved Wednesday also contains a controversial provi-sion that would drastically restrict the transfer of older mortgages when homes were sold. The provision, which deals with "due-on-sale" clauses in home mortgage loans, would override state laws and court decisions that have restricted enforcement of 1980 total.

Many financial institutions have mortgages on homes when they are sold and issue new loans at the current high market rates, now averaging more than 15 percent. In addition, the legislation would repeal the interest rate differential that gives thrift institutions — savings banks and savings and loan associations — an advan-tage in attracting funds by being able to pay a quarter percentage point more on certain deposits than commercial banks are permitted to pay. The measure calls for the elimination by Jan. 1, 1984, of this differential.

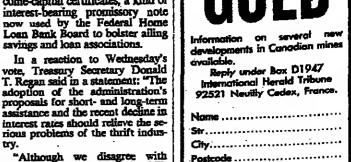

The measure contains many provisions of the Senate bill, spon-sored by Jake Garn, Republican of Utah, including a key provision that calls for the issuing of government-guaranteed promissory notes to bolster the net worth of faltering savings institutions.

In effect, if a thrift institution's net worth fell below a certain level, the government would add to the institution's assets by authorizing federal regulators to provide income-capital certificates, a kind of interest-bearing promissory note now used by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to bolster ailing savings and loan associations. In a reaction to Wednesday's vote, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said in a statement: "The adoption of the administration's proposals for short- and long-term assistance and the recent decline in rious problems of the thrift indus-"Although we disagree with some of the provisions in this bill, on balance, we believe it's an important first step in the admir tration's efforts to improve the fi-first batch of statistics showed that about 65 million shares a day are traded in London, a range compa-rable to activity on the New York Stock Exchange, but the price per share tends to be considerably low-er than in New York.

The London Exchange had not been entirely devoid of volume fig-ures. For the past 18 years, the ex-change had issued compilations of ne number of transactions and of the total value of trading. Officials the exchange believe the latter easure will remain the primary yardstick in London.

How successful LIFFE will be was hotly debated Thursday. Volume in the opening session totaled about 3,000 contracts — a considerable number — but most experts believe several months will be needed to determine whether the exchange can generate enough vol-ume or "liquidity" to serve the banks, brokers, companies and in-dividuals who would use the mar-ket to hedge and to speculate.

The concern in London was whether the lack of a tradition of futures trading and speculation as was present in Chicago would be a hindrance. Efforts to trade fman-cial futures in New York have been mostly unsuccessful. But by some calculations, New York was hurt by its proximity to Chicago while London will be six time zones away.

"In general, I think people are looking at this as a very new and particularly difficult enterprise," id Mark Eynon, a manager at BA Futures, a Bank of America subsidiary. "There's a little hit of an education problem."

Elaborate preparations have been long under way as part of an effort to compensate for the lack of experience of London traders th futures. Training sessions been held for three months, practice trading has been going nn for two weeks with the help of computer simulations.

While some hostages took refuge in sleep, and others succeeded in bolstering their spirits by talking back to or Rosen endured spells of terrible anxiety. During his worst attack, he crazed pump, sending excruciating pulsations throughout my body. My limbs jerked like a pupper's, and I had no control over the terrifying throhb-ing in my diaphragm." Rosen was eventually given antidepressant drugs to help him steep, but an initial exami-nation by an Iranian physician yield-ed only the following diagnosis: "Your problems would disappear if your country would hand hack the shah to where he belongs." Rosen's impressions of his prison guards come through vividly in their names alone — "Handcuff Man,"

"Gun Waver," "Joker," "Adolf" and so on. But other guards would provide on but other guards would provide yet envision themselves. their prisoners with ample reading material to fill the unending hours of captivity.

BOOKS

THE DESTINED HOUR The Hostage Crisis and One Family's Ordeal

By Barbara and Barry Rosen, with George Feifer. 328 pp. $17.95, Doubleday, Garden City, New York, N.Y. 11530.

Reviewed by Diane Cole

THE elements of the story remind one at first of a novel by Graham Greene: Rocked by revolution and a on religious fervor, an exotic country casts an angry eye upon the English-speaking foreigners and demands vengeance.

But call the country Iran, see the United States through the fanatical eyes of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, and you will begin to relive the story of the 52 Americans who were held hostage in Tehran from Nov. 4, 1979, through Jan. 20, 1981.

The book begins somewhat slowly with Rosen's description of his years in Iran as a Peace Corps volunteer during the late 1960s and his subsequent graduate studies in Iranian polities and culture. The day-by-day story of that long siege is the stuff of night-mares, and in "The Destined Hour," mares, and in "The Destined Hour," former hostage Barry Rosen and his wife, Barbara, tell their tale in harrowing, moving detail. They remind us painfully that the "happy ending" of the hostages' release came after 444 days of torturous physical and emotional hardship, and that the legacy of that siege is far more than just a memory. Even now, the Rosens tell us, they are still adjusting, for the siege changed them both.

A native New Yorker, he eventually married another New Yorker, and when he returned to Tehran in 1978 as press attachê at the U.S. Embassy, the biggest conflicts Barbara and Barthe biggest conflicts Barbara and Barry Rosen thought they faced were do-mestic and religious — how to recon-cile Rosen's Jewish family with Barba-ra's Catholic family.

That perspective changed dramati-cally when Rosen and his colleagues were seized by Iranian protesters, threatened at gunpoint, handcuffed, blindfolded, and imprisoned in a suc-cession of basements, cells and barred rooms. Although various clergymen and other visitors to Iran periodically brought back word to the United States that the hostages were being "treated well," Rosen's narrative should force even these optimists to think again.

In one six-month period, for instance, Rosen was allowed a total of less than one hour of outdoor ex-ercise. Unbroken weeks of enforced silence was calculated to isolate further and demoralize the hostages, making them dependent on their captors not only for food and bathroom privileges, but for any scrap of oews that hinted at their fate.

- This dependence exposed the captives to cruel games — most chill-ing on the night of Feb. 5, when pris-on guards masked like executioners woke Rosen and his cellmates, hlindfolded them and lined them against the corridor wall. The guards then ordered the prisoners to drop their trousers, stuck gun barrels in their backs, and fired. The shots were blank, hot the terror and the humiliation had hit playing small pranks on the Iranian guards, many, like Rosen, began to suffer the malaise of depression. Al-though be was oever less than defiant in his attitude toward his captors, son" - herself. writes, "My pulse raced too fast to get a count. My heart had become a

A few even slipped their captives extra food and showed both compassion and courtesy. The small gestures of these few guards, however, were of these few guards, however, were not enough to prevent two hostages, from attempting suicide, or to keep others from despair.

What did keep many demons at bay, however, was the hostages' determination to give each other comfort even when they could not speak, often simply by winking or making eye contact. They further bolstered their sagging spirits through their resourcefulness in communicating news: Rosen for instance, learned of the shah's death through a message carved in a death through a message carved in a bar of soap.

While the families of the hostages ohviously did not need to resort to this kind of subterfuge, they also took comfort from each other — a point made powerfully by Barbara's narrative, which is skillfully intercut, in alternating chapters, with Rosen's.

Barbara's story is hardly that of one who waits passively or fretfully, as anyone who viewed her many television appearances during the months of the siege can attest. Her journey from the reserved woman who would excuse herself early from Washington's diplomatic parties to the force-ful, straightforward spokeswoman for her husband's cause seems to surprise — and trouble — no one more than Barbara herself.

Living with her parents, her two nall children, and her sister's family in her parents' home in Brooklyn.

Barbara felt at the start of the crisis that "there were too many people in talk to for me to need a psychiatrist."

Nevertheless, the stress took its toll in the long hours of her "sleep of the " emotionally dead," and physically, in neck and lower back pains. An intelli-gent woman lacking only in self-confidence, Barbara quickly grew disillusioned with the networks cursory treatment of substantive issues in favor of footage of Rosen's mother weeping, for instance, or a hlindfolded hostage (incorrectly identified as Rosen) being paraded through the emhassy grounds.

The many paradoxes arising from her role as activist were oot lost on her. While Rosen languished in an Iranian cell, Barbara flew to Europe to meet with Helmut Schmidt and the pope. Partially as a result of her appearances oo television, she was named "Mother of the Year," al-though she believed that the emotional toll taken by her husband's plight had made her a poor model for any mother. Most ironically, she tells us with engaging candor, Rosen's long captivity forced her into a oew, more independent role both professionally and in her marriage — one that she would not have forged for herself if her husband had not been taken hostage. As a result, she writes in the epilogue dated "One Year Later," "the lasting effects of his captivity seem to

For both Barbara and Barry, though, one year may be too short a time to evaluate the lasting effects of more than a year's captivity. North's cue-bid of three hearts was an invitation to his partner to bid four spades, and South accepted on the basis of his wellplaced heart king. On the face of it, South was due to succeed, since he has one loser in trumps and one in each red suit.

West dutifully shifted to a club, and South was on the spot when he won with the ace in dummy. Knowing that West held the A-K of diamonds originally, he not unreasonably concluded that East must have both missing the Atlanta manager, Joe Torre, said after the game. Both teams played their butts off tonight and I know the feeling the Dodgers have right now. They just can't believe what's happening to them Well, I'm glad it's them and not us with that feeling right now."

In the Los Angeles lockerroom, silence prevailed. "We've got to win all four and hope we get some help," said a somber Tom Lasorda, the Dodger manager. "This is hard to believe."

With one more game against the Dodgers and three more — Friday, Saturday and Sunday — in San Di-ego against the Padres, the Braves could clinch the title with three victories regardless of what the Dodgers or Giants do.

Terry Forster (5-6) the third Dodger hurler, walked Ramirez leading off the 12th. After Ramirez stole second, Bob Watson was walked intentionally. Los Angeles missed a chance to win in the ninth after loading the bases with one out. Steve Sax forced a runner at home and Rick Monday lined out to second to end the threat. The Dodgers also had a runner on base in both the 10th and 11th and failed to score. Fernando Valenzuela worked seven innings for the Dodgers and gave up seven hits. Tommy Boggs started for the Braves but was hifted in the sixth.

In San Francisco, Chili Davis and Jeff Leonard each hit home runs to power the Giants to a 6-1 victory over Houston. Leonard hit a two-run shot, his eighth of the season, off Joe Niekro (16-12) in the second uning. Davis led off the fifth with his 19th homer of the year to give the Giants a 3-1 lead. Prince Philip Opens Commonwealth Games

BRISBANE, Australia — The 12th Commonwealth Games opened spectacularly Thursday despite the absence of what would have been its three greatest attrac-tions: Queen Elizabeth, Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett.

The queen's husband, Prince Philip, launched the games in her place but there was no substitute for Coe and Ovett, the star middledistance runners whose absence caused much world interest in the games to evaporate. In opening the games, Prince Philip read a message from the queen that had been carried by relay runner from London. The message, carried to the stadium in a baton, was delivered by Australian gold medalist Raciene Boyle. It is 52 years since the first

NFL Ponders Various Ways to Revise Schedule

By Michael Janofsky New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The National Football League is considering the cancellation of not only some regular-season games but also the wild-card round of the playoffs as a result of the player strike, which Thursday led to the formal dropping of a second weekend of

These possibilities were raised Wednesday by Pete Rozelle, the NFL commissioner, who suggested in a telephone interview that the elimination of the wild-card round might be the most convenient way of getting in a full Rozelle's comments concern perhaps the most perplexing problem for the league during the player strike: the reconstruction of the seacials are discussing various contingency plans.

"One week is the easiest to make up,"
Rozelle said. In that case, he explained, the lost games could be played on the weekend followng the last one of the regular season.

The date and the location of the Super Bowl, Rozelle said, will not be changed, in part because of the vast logistical problems that would be involved in switching hotel and travel accommodations for league personnel, the teams, sponsors and the news media.

If the strike affects more than two weekends of the season, the league may have to do without some regular-season games, the commissioner said If so, determining which games to reschedule on the two weekends made vacant — one by eliminating the open weekend before the Super Bowl, the other by dropping the wild-card round — could be a matter as simple as draw-

Rozelle added that the strike could reach a point where it would make little sense to resume the season. There has been no determination as to exactly where that point would be, he said, "but we have thought about it."

Negotiations between the players association and the Management Council were scheduled to resume here Thursday afternoon. The talks were to be the first since bargaining broke off Sunday, when management offered to guaran-tee the players $1.6 billion over five years.

Rozelle Testifies

Rozelle told a congressional subcommittee on Thursday that the limited antitrust exemption sought by the NFL would not affect con-tract negotiations between the NFL owners and players, The Associated Press reported from Washington.

"This legislation simply has no effect - negative or otherwise -- on player union or collective bargaining matters," he testified.

Garvey, however, pointed out to the commit tee that the network television contracts with the NFL "provide payment to the NFL owners even though games are never played and televised because of a labor dispute." He said this enabled management to "coerce employees to accept unlawful bargaining proposals."

SPORTS BRIEFS

Austin Extended in Indoor Tourney

PHILADELPHIA - Tracy Austin, the top seed, overcame a formida ble challenge Wednesday night to defeat Sharon Walsh, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, in the second round of the U.S. Women's Indoor Tennis Championships. Reaching the quarterfinals with Austin were Susan Mascarin, who upset Andrea Leand, 6-3, 6-1; Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia, who defeated Anna Fernandez, 6-2, 6-2, and Barbara Potter, who beat Kim Jones, 7-5, 6-1. The other quarterfinalists were to be decided Thursday. Walsh made a dramatic charge in the third set after being down, 0-4 and 1-5, to pull within 4-5 by taking 11 straight points.

Strachan Jailed 3 Years for Drug Use NEW ORLEANS - Mike Strachan, a former National Football League running back, has been sentenced in U.S. District Court to serve three years in a federal penitentiary on cocaine charges.

"I'm quite upset about it. I don't think it was fair at all," Strachan said Wednesday, asserting that he did nothing that George Rogers, Chuck

Muncie, Frank Warren and Dave Waymer had not also done. Strachan was a teammate of the four during his six seasons with New Orleans. Walton Rejoins Clippers Part-Time PORTLAND, Oregon - Bill Walton, the 6-foot-11 center who led the Portland Trail Blazers to the National Basketball Association champion-ship in 1977, will play part-time for the San Diego Clippers this fall, according to Ted Podleski, the Clipper general manager. In an interview with The Oregonian newspaper, Podleski said: "We want to go slow and hope that in January he can play three times a week." Walton has suffered foot injuries since the 1977-78 season.

Barnes to Play for New Detroit Team

DETROIT - Marvin Barnes, the 6-foot-9, 225-pound forward who once spent a year in prison for violating parole, has signed a contract to play the 1982-83 season for the newly formed Detroit Spirits of the Continental Basketball Association, the club announced Wednesday. It will mark the second time the 30-year-old Barnes has played in Detroit, In 1976 the Detroit Pistons of the NBA purchased Barnes in the American Basketball Association dispersal draft,

The Masculine 'Weepie'

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — The popular success of "Chariots of Fire," a sentimental film about young men striving to become Olympic champions, puzzled me until an Englishman pointed out that the explanation is quite simple. "It's a male weepie," he said.

Of course. As masters of popular entertainment have always known, men in the audience like a good cry just as much as the women do. The difference is that men don't like to sob out loud. It em-barrasses them, so they prefer something that makes them cry silently but doesn't reduce them to watery convulsions.

The well-made "male weepie" produces in the male that chokedup sensation in the chest called "a lump in the throat." "Chariots of Fire" gave me "a lump in the throat," and I'm not ashamed to admit it. If it had pushed sen-timentality too far and reduced me to copious tears, I would have detested it. Wanting to cry was a delicious sensation; being pressed for outright sobs would have offended me, and I might have left the theater feeling the movie was ridicu-

Oscar Wilde spoke for the male artitude toward "weepies" when, writing of one of Dickens' tearstained passages about the death of a cardboard heroine, he said that only a person with a heart of stone could read it without laugh-used to have the same response to female "weepies" — also known as "four-handkerchief movies" in which Barbara Stanwyck or Berte Davis or Joan Crawford had the women in the theater wailing damply in the dark. While all around me trembled with sorrow, I yearned to laugh aloud. Those who say men would be healthier if they wept with less restraint may have a good point, but whether venting gales of tears at the movie house improves the hygiene is another question.

Still, the male pleasure in feeling a lump in the throat is undeniable. Moviemakers of the old school always understood it, always knew that men wanted to feel like crying without being brought to sobs, and cunningly exploited this hunger. When John Wayne, the ultimate scene in which his troopers presented him with a watch at the final muster, then focused the camera on Duke's face fighting to hold back the tears, while every man in the audience felt that delightful lump rising in his throat. If Duke had sobbed, we would all have started to sob and hated it and started to giggle, but the director knew where to stop.

In recent years when films be-came technically and, often, artistically better, the lump-in-thethroat effect was no longer much sought. Maybe movie people thought it was too easy, too cheap, too old-fashioned. In these good new movies, the audience was most often detached from the emotional turmoil of the characters.
You can watch Clint Eastwood,

Marlon Brando, even Burt Rey-nolds with fascination, as a scientist might study his specimens, but it's hard to feel much kinship with the characters they play.

In these movies there is a great deal of blood, gallons of blood, but it never seems to me as terrible as the tiny droplets of blood glimpsed briefly when John Wayne or Gary Cooper bled. In fact it doesn't seem like blood at all. It seems more like ichor, the inhuman substance that flowed in the arteries of the gods.

The box-office success of "An Officer and a Gentleman" in the United States this summer has interested the movie reviewers precisely because it is such an unmodern film. Except for the newfangled obligatory sex scenes, it is pure 1943. It tells you what it's going to tell you; then it tells you; then it tells you what it's told you.

The audience knows what is going to happen from start to fin-ish. We know that Mayo, the rat with women, will undergo redemption, learn humility, and marry the good woman. They don't make movies like this anymore, and maybe they shouldn't, yet audiences love it. Why? Well, it raises a lump in the throat, just as "Chariots of Fire" did. It's a "male weep-suppose the success of these two films will tempt a lot of movie people and we'll see a run of new shows catering to the rediscovery of the fact that men like to feel the tears rise as much as women do. be to keep those

A 'Doll's' Death

By Michiko Kakutani

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Like too many theater stories, it was a story of expectation and failure, hope and disappointment. What made Sunday's closing of "A Doll's Life" different was not simply that the Broadway season's first major musical had run for only five performances in four days and cost its producers

$4 million, but that it had involved three of Broadway's most gifted and successful artists: the innovative director and producer

Harold Prince, and the celebrated libretto team of Betty Comden

Only hours before the opening Sept. 23, things had seemed so much brighter. Assembled at the Mark Hellinger Theater for a last rehearsal, the company presented Prince, Comden, Green and the composer, Larry Grossman, with composer, Larry Grossman, with opening-night presents and stood to appland their work.

For Comden and Green, "A Doll's Life" — a kind of musical sequel to Ibsen's "A Doll's House" — represented a "big step," a venture into more serious subject matter than before. For Prince, it was a special show, a Prince, it was a special show, a show he said he loved.

Reason for Optimism

be expectant, even buoyant. "A Doll's Life," after all, marked the reunion of the team that had colremon of the team that had col-laborated in 1978 on the Tony-award winning "On the 20th-Century," and while Prince's last show, "Merrily We Roll Along," had run for only 16 performances, his record in both artistic and commercial terms has been rewunderkind, Prince had demon-strated a brilliant mastery of craft, pioneering the notion of the so-called "concept" musical.

With such shows as "Cabaret," but also helped redefine the American musical. In 1980, when tured role was recast, a scene was cut, specific references to Ibsen were removed, and new endings were tried. Although the writers had at first envisioned an inti-mate portrait of Nora, that story gradually assumed more symbolic proportions.

After 6½ weeks of rebearsal, the company moved to Los Angeles, and on June 15, the show opened at the Ahmanson Theater to negative reviews. Dan Sullivan, wrote in the Los Angeles Times that the show "may be the worst thing that has happened to [Ibsen's] play since the Germans demanded a happy ending back in the 1870s" in the 1880s." Though disappointing the reviews, as Green noted, "didn't shake our belief in the show one iota." Arguing that Los Angeles critics and audiences could not accurately forecast Broadway reaction, the show's collaborators decided against making the kind of substantial changes that were made in the final stages of "Merrily." The important thing, they argued, was to remain faithful to their original vision.

Favorable Signs Prince's faith was bolstered by favorable review in Variety. Even more encouraging, be noted, were comments of prominent New York visitors. And so for the next five weeks, Prince and company worked on relatively minor changes: clarifying ambiguities, condensing a slams Ibsen's famous door.

Rehearsals began April 19, and during the next few weeks, a feashow. This done, they decided that cast members needed time to settle into their roles. Arguing that a vacation would give him a fresh perspective, Prince left for Majorca. "Everyone," he recalled, "said, 'How can he leave a show in trouble? But the truth is I think we did our work in those first five weeks."

Meanwhile, even though tickets had been sold as a part of the civic Light Opera subscription, business was poor. The average weekly revenues hovered around $113,000, out of a possible $316,328, resulting in a loss of about $100,000 a week for 10

Anxious but Optimistic

When Prince and the show's writers returned after five weeks, they felt that things had some-how, magically, fallen into place. Eager to avoid extra expenses, Prince cut the show's California run by two weeks and on Sept. 8
"A Doll's Life" began previews in New York. The reaction of the andiences, the cast members felt, was sympathetic, and they went into opening night anxious but

Unfortunately, it soon became apparent that "A Doll's Life" was not what the critics wanted. In The New York Times, Frank Rich, for instance, described it as a well-intentioned show "that collapses in its prologue and then sicids into a toboggan slide from which there is no return" - and the next morning it was an-nounced that the show would close following the Sunday matinee. such investment of faith, the almost unanimonsly poor reviews came as a terrible shock. What went wrong? Was it poor judgment, myopic optimism or just ill timing and bad luck? If some critics believed that a workshop production would have helped, others argued that con-certed efforts might have sal-vaged the show in California. Some questioned the quality of the music and staging, while oth-ers wondered about the casting of a little-known actress as Nora.

Still others contended that no one could have saved the show. that the idea was simply a bad one from the start. How, they asked could one hope to base a musical on Ibsen and the issue of feminism? And yet, similar ques-tions might have been asked of earlier Prince efforts: certainly shows based on an Argentine dictator and a · murderous barber must have seemed equally incongruous — until "Evita" and "Sweeney Todd" became hits.

In any case, artists as gifted as those involved with "A Doll's Life" will soon go on to other projects. There will be other projects. There will be other chances to create the great American umsical. As he was leaving the theater on opening night, Green noted that he was planming to "get back to work" after relaxing for a day or two. Grossman has a show opening in Boston this week, and another musical in the works, And Prince said he would take one day off, then get to work with Beverly Sills on a new version of "Candide."

DiMaggio Ends Rose

Joe DiMaggio, the former base-ball great, who was married for three years to Manlyn Mouroe, has ended a 20-year standing order for thrice-weekly delivery of roses to her pink crypt in Los Angeles. Bob Alianati, a co-owner of Parisian Florist, the Hollywood shop that has filled the order since the star's drug overdose death in August 1962, said DiMaggio ended the deliveries Sept. 1. "He called a mutual friend of ours and just said he wanted to stop sending the flowers," Alhanati said. "He gave no explanation." Upon learning of DiMaggio's decision, the film producer Robert Statzer, 55, who claims he was secretly married to Monroe for less than a week in Oc-tober 1952 but that the documents were destroyed, placed an order for weekly delivery of three roses, Alhanati said. Slatzer, 55, said he arranged to be billed once a year and would have his will modified to assure the roses are sent even after he dies. "I took over pretty much where DiMaggio left off," Slatzer said. "The fact is I was already going out there with flowers about every two weeks."

Eldridge Cleaver, a former leader of the radical Black Panthers, was heckled by students at College Park, Maryland, as he urged them to reject communism and mili-tance for belief in God and America. His visit to the University of Maryland, sponsored by a student group affiliated with the Rev. Sun Mynng Moon's Unification Church, sparked protests from members of the campus Black Student Union. The Maryland lecpure was the first stop of a pro-jected 60-college tour Cleaver is making for the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles, an offshoot of the Unification Church. Students interrupted Cleaver's lecture with shouts of "Uncle Tom" and epithets. Cleaver, 47, defended his connection with the Unification Church, saying that while he was not a member.
